Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as iſinglaſs. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ISINGLASS Stone. n. ſ. This is a foſſil which is one of the pureſt and ſimpleſt of the natural bodies. It is found in broad maſſes, compoſed of a multitude of extremely thin plates or flakes. The maſſes are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are ſeparated, they are perfectly colourleſs, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glaſs. It is found in Muſcovy, Perſia, the iſland of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. The ancients made their windows of it, inſtead of glaſs. It is alſo ſometimes uſed for glaſs before pictures, and for horn in lanthorns Hill's Mat. Med.

ISLAND. n. ſ. [inſula, Latin; iſola, Italian, eyland, Erſe. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land ſurrounded by water.

He will carry this iſland home in his pocket, and give it his ſon for an apple. —And ſowing the kernels of it in the ſea, bring forth more iſlands. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

Within a long receſs there lies a bay,
An iſland ſhades it from the rolling ſea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Some fairer world in depth of woods embrac'd,
Some happier iſland in the watry waſte. Johnſon.
Iſland of bliſs! amid' the ſubject ſeas Thomſon.

ISLANDER. n. ſ. [from iſland. Pronounce ilander.] An inhabitant of a country ſurrounded by water

We, as all iſlanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Camd.

Your dinner, and the generous iſlanders
By you invited, do attend your preſence. Shakeſp. Othel.

There are many bitter ſayings againſt iſlanders in general, repreſenting them as fierce, treacherous, and unhoſpitable: thoſe who live on the continent have ſuch frequent intercourſe with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than thoſe who are the inhabitants of an iſland. Addiſon's Freeholder.

A race of rugged mariners are theſe
Unpoliſh'd men, and [illegible]
The native iſlanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope's Odyſſey.

ISLE n. ſ. [iſle, French; inſula, Latin. Pronounce ile.]

1. An iſland; a country ſurrounded by water.

Is it not an eaſy matter
To make lord William Haſtings of our mind,
For the inſtallment of this noble duke
In the ſeat royal of this famous iſle? Shakeſp. R. III.

The dreadful fight
Betwixt a nation and two whales I write
Seas ſtain'd with gore I ſing, adventrous toil,
And how theſe monſters did diſarm an iſle. Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aiſle, from aile, French, from ala, Latin, the aile being probably at firſt only a wing or ſide walk. It may come likewiſe from allee, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or publick building.

O'er the twilight groves and duſky caves,
Long ſounding iſles and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy ſits. Pope.

ISOPERIME'TRICAL. n. ſ. [ἴσος, πέρι, and μέτρον.] In geometry, are ſuch figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greateſt. Harris.

ISO'SCELES. n. ſ. [iſoſcele, Fr. or equicrural triangle.] That which hath only two ſides equal. Harris.

ISSUE. n. ſ. [iſſue, French.]

1. The act of paſſing out.

2. Exit; egreſs; or paſſage out

Unto the Lord belong the iſſues from death. Pſ. lxvi. 20.

Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the iſſues of life. Prov. iv. 23

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable which is in motion, as the only means to find an iſſue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have eaſily prevented thoſe great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are ſo impoveriſhed, in what condition muſt they have been, if that iſſue of wealth had been ſtopped? Swift

3. Event; conſequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine iſſues Shakeſp. Meaſ. for Meaſure.

If I were ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the iſſue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Againſt the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wiſeſt Shak. Winter's Tale.

But let the iſſue correſpondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterprize. Fairfax.

If things were caſt upon this iſſue, that God ſhould never prevent ſin 'till man deſerved it, the beſt would ſin, and ſin for ever. South's Sermons

The witteſt ſayings and ſentences will be found the iſſues of chance, and nothing elſe but ſo many lucky hits of a roving fancy South's Sermons.

Our preſent condition is better for us in the iſſue, than that uninterrupted health and ſecurity that the atheiſt deſires. Bent.

4. Termination;

4. Termination; conclusion.
He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publickly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.
What issue of my love remains for me!
How wild a passion works within my breast!
With what prodigious flames am I possest! Dryden.
Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and thus solves the difficulty. Broome.

5. Sequel deduced from premises.
I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakespeare's Othello.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.
This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wiseman.

7. Evacuation.
A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. Mat. ix. 20.

8. Progeny; offspring.
O nation miserable!
When shalt thou see thy wholsome days again?
Since that the truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurst. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd
True paradise, under the Æthiop line
By Nilus' head. Milton's Paradise Lost.
This old peaceful prince, as heav'n decreed,
Was blest'd with no male issue to succeed. Dryden's Æn.
The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to consist with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. [In law.] Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expences of suit; sometime for profits of lands or tenements; sometime for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury. Issue is either general or special general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be quæstio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be quæstio facti. Cowel.

To Issue, v. n. [from the noun, issir, Fr. uscire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.
Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Ezek. xlvii. 1.
From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Raleigh's History of the World.
W[illegible]'d from a cave Milton.
Ere Pallas issu'd from the thunderer's head,

2. To make an eruption.
Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakespeare.
See that none hence issue forth a spy. Milton.
Haste, arm your Ardeans, issue to the plain;
With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.
At length there issu'd, from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Straight issue through the sides assembling swarms. Dryden.
Full for the port the Ithacensians stand,
And furl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope's Odyssey.

3. To proceed as an offspring.
Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings xx. 18.

4. To be produced by any fund.
These altarages issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To run out in lines.
It would be tried in pipes, being made with a belly towards the lower end, and then issuing into a straight concave again. Bacon's Natural History.

To Issue, v. a.

1. To send out; to send forth.
A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense.
If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a protestation. Clarendon.
Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mourning god.
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deities. Dryden.

In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryden.
They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth Ayliffe's Parergon

Issueless, adj [from issue.] Without offspring; without descendants.
Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew's Survey of Cornwal.
I have done sin,
For which the heav'ns, taking angry note,

Isthmus n. s. [isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent
There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnably fortified. Sandys's Travels.
The north side of the Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas. Brerewood on Languages.
O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet can'st not wave nor wind sustain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.
Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it. Stillingfleet.
Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Creech.
Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.

It, pronoun. [hit, Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things.
Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Bramh. against Hobbs.
Will our great anger learn to stoop so low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.
Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who master art of it. Cowley.
His son, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Flatman.
The time will come, it will, when you shall know
The rage of love. Dryden.
How can I speak? or how, sir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dryden.
A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions! Locke.
The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabrick began to melt. Addison's Freeholder.
If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.
How is it with our general?
—— Even so
As with a man by his own alms imposon'd,
And with his charity slain. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. It is used for the thing, the matter; the affair.
It's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will Shakesp. Henry VIII.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.
He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,
He hoisted with such might and strength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length. Hudibras.
The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis
If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.
The Lacedemonians, at the straights of Thermopylæ, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.
I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Locke.
A mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Addison's Spectator.
Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or rudely to persons.
Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will

7 It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the ity a of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word
Macduff is fled to England. Shakesp. Macbeth.

City,
'Tis I, that made thy widows. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
'Tis these that early taint the female soul. Pope.

ITCH. n. s. [gecpa, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised as microscopes have discovered by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Creep in the minds and marrows of our youths,
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains. Shak. Timon.
The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed. Deutr. xxviii. 27.
As if divinity had catch'd
The itch, on purpose, to be scratch'd. Hudibras.

2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is cured by rubbing.

3 A constant teazing desire.

A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Estrange.
He had foul pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.
From servants company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.
At half mankind when gen'rous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue; for he thinks them knaves.
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.

To ITCH v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.

A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wiseman's Surgery.
My right eye itches; some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear. Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivoca-

Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.——Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shakespeare.
Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm,
To sell and mart your offices for gold. Shak. Julius Cæsar.
The itching ears, being an epidemick disease, give fair opportunity to every mountebank. Decay of Piety.
All fools have still an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing side. Pope.

ITCHY. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.

ITEM adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

ITEM. n. s.

1. A new article.

I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items. Shakespeare.
If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Glanv.

2. A hint; an innuendo.

To ITERATE. v. a. [itero, Latin.]

1. To repeat, to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all: this is the very cause why we iterate the psalms oftner than any other part of Scripture beside, the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone to read them, as other parts of Scripture he doth. Hook.
If the one may monthly, the other may daily be iterated. Hooker.
In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated unto the best and wisest. Hooker.
The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from his duty. Bacon's Henry VII.
There be two kinds of reflections of sounds, the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly: the other in concurrence, when the sound reflecting, returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterateth it not, but amplifieth it. Bacon's Natural History.

2. To do over again.

Ashes thoroughly burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
Adam took no thought,
Eating his fill, nor Eve to iterate
Her former trespass fear'd, the more to sooth
Him with her lov'd society. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix.

ITERANT. adj. [iterans, Latin.] Repeating.

Waters being near, make a current echo; but being farther off, they make an iterant echo. Bacon's Nat. History.

ITERATION. n. s. [iteration, French, iteratio, Latin.] Repetition; recital over again.

Truth tri'd with iteration
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shakespeare.
My husband!
——Ay, 'twas he that told me first
—— My husband!
——What needs this iteration, woman?
I say, thy husband. Shakespeare's Othello.

Iterations are commonly loss of time, but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question, for it chaseth away many a frivolous speech. Bacon's Essays.
In all these respects it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is further improved by the frequent iteration and repetition. Hammond.

ITINERANT. adj. [itinerant, French.] Wandering; not fettled.

It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of itinerant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares. Addison's Spectator.

ITI'NERARY. n. s. [itinéraire, French; itinerarium, Latin.] A book of travels.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom. Addison on Italy.

ITI'NERARY. adj. [itinéraire, Fr. itinerarius, Lat.] Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it were rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress. Bacon's Henry VII.

ITSE'LF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.

Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn
Itself for being there? Shakesp. Macbeth.
Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor. Locke.

JU'BILANT. adj. [jubilans, Lat.] Uttering songs of triumph.

While the bright pomp ascended jubilant. Milt. Par. Lost.

JUBILA'TION. n. s. [jubilation, Fr. jubilatio, Lat.] The act of declaring triumph.

JU'BILEE. n. [jubile, Fr. jubilum, from jubilo, low Latin.] A publick festivity; a time of rejoicing; a season of joy.

Angels utt'ring joy, heav'n rung
With jubilee, and loud hosanna's fill'd
Th' eternal regions. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing: the recreation of the judgment, or rejoicing, the jubilee of reason. South.
The town was all a jubilee of feasts. Dryden.

JUCU'NDITY. n. s. [jucunditas, jucundus, Latin.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.

JUMART. n. ſ.

Mules and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an aſs and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent. Locke.

To JU'MBLE. v. a. [in Chaucer, jombre, from tombler, French, Skinner.] To mix violently and confuſedly together.

Perſons and humours may be jumbled and diſguiſed, but nature, like quickſilver, will never be killed. L'Eſtrange.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the ſame meaning, and one may obſerve, how apt that is to jumble together paſſages of ſcripture, and thereby diſturb the true meaning of holy ſcripture. Locke.

Writing is but juſt like dice,
And lucky mains make people wiſe;
And jumbled words, if fortune throw them,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem. Prior.

Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquility, to believe that all things were at firſt created, and are continually ordered for the beſt, than that the whole univerſe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favouredly cobled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude ſhuffles of matter. Bentley's Sermons.

How tragedy and comedy embrace,
How farce and epick get a jumbled race. Pope's Dunciad.

That the univerſe was formed by a fortuitous concourſe of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a moſt ingenious treatiſe of philoſophy. Swift.

To JU'MBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.

JU'MBLE. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Confuſed mixture; violent and confuſed agitation.

Had the world been coagmented from that ſuppoſed fortuitous jumble, this hypotheſis had been tolerable. Glanville.

What jumble here is made of eccleſiaſtical revenues, as if they were all alienated with equal juſtice. Swift.

JU'MENT. n. ſ. [jument, Fr. jumentum, Lat.] Beaſt of burthen.

In some sort it jumps with my humour. Shakespeare.

But though they jump not on a just account,
Yet do they all confirm a Turkish fleet. Shakesp. Othello.

Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barb'rous nations. Shakespeare.

Herein perchance he jumps not with Lipsius. Hakewill.

Never did trulty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras, p. i.

This shews how perfectly the rump
And commonwealth in nature jump:
For as a fly that goes to bed,
Rests with his tail above his head;
So in this mungrel state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers. Hudibras, p.

Good wits jump, and mine the nimbler of the two. Addis.

Good now, how your devotions jump with mine. Dryd

When any law does not conduce to the public safety, but in some extraordinary juncture, the very observation of it would endanger the community, that law ought to be laid asleep. Addison's Freeholder, N° 16.

JUNE. n. f. [Juin, Fr. Junius, Lat.] The sixth month from January.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark green. Peacham.

JU'NIOR. adj. [junior, Lat.] One younger than another.

The fools my juniors by a year,
Are tortur'd with suspense and fear,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd to stand between. Swift

According to the nature of men of years, I was repining at the rise of my juniors, and unequal distri[illegible]

JU'NIPER. n. f. [juniperus, Lat.] A plant.

The leaves of the juniper are long, narrow, and prickly; the male flowers are, in some species, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree, but in other species they are produced on different trees from the fruit: the first is a soft pulpy berry, containing three seeds in each. Miller.

Some of our common juniper shrubs are males and some females, of the same species. The male shrubs produce, in April and May, a small kind of juli with apices on them, very large, and full of farina; the females produce none of these juli, but only the berries, which do not ripen till the second year, and then do not immediately fall off; so that it is no uncommon thing to see the berries of three different years at once on the same tree. The shrub is very common with us on heaths and barren hills, but the berries used medicinally in our shops are brought from Germany, where it is greatly more abundant. The berries are powerful attenuants, diuretics, and carminative. Hill.

A clyster may be made of the common decoctions, or of mallows, hay, and juniper berries, with oil of linseed. Wiseman.

JUNK. n. f. [probably an Indian word.]

To JU'NKET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feast secretly; to make entertainments by stealth.

Whatever good bits you can pilfer in the day, save them to junket with your fellow servants at night. Swift.

2. To feast.

Job's children junketed and feasted together often, but the reckoning cost them dear at last. South's Sermons.

The apostle would have no reveling or junketing. South.

JU'NTO. n. f. [Italian.] A cabal; a kind of men combined in any secret design.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work, at length come and dance attendance for approbation upon a junto of petty tyrants, acted by party and prejudice, who denied fitness from learning, and grace from morality. South.

From this time began an intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers, which had like to have ended in my destruction. Gulliver's Travels.

IVORY. n. f. [ivoire, French; ebur, Lat.]

Ivory is a hard, solid, and firm substance, of a fine white colour, and capable of a very good polish: it is the [illegible] ernus of the elephant, who carries on each side of his [illegible] tooth of six or seven feet in length, of the thickness of a man's thigh at the base, and almost entirely solid, the two sometimes weighing three hundred and thirty pounds: these ivory tusks are hollow from the base to a certain height, and the cavity is filled with a compact medullary substance, seeming to have a great number of glands in it. The finest ivory is brought from the East-Indies, where great quantity of it is not taken immediately from the head of the animal, but found buried in the earth. The ivory of the islands of Ceylon and of Achem do not become yellow in the wearing as all other ivory does, and it therefore bears a greater price than of the Guinea coast. The preparations of ivory have the same restorative virtues with those of the hartshorn. Hill.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Draw Erato with a sweet and lovely countenance, bearing a heart with an ivory key. Peacham.

From their ivory port the cherubim
Forth issu'd. Milton.

Two gates the silent house of sleep adorn,
Of polish'd ivory this, that of transparent horn.
True visions through transparent horn arise,
Through polish'd ivory pass deluding lies. Dryden.

> Officer, jugler, or justice of peace,
> Juror, or judge. Donne.
>
> About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut up. Hayward.

JURY. n. f. [jurata, Lat. juré, Fr.]

Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver a truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assise or jury. The trial by assise, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in courts of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the escheatour make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest: if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between par and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize, assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, ... upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half year courts of the ju... errants, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes, whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, there are usually many juries, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, bills vera, or dismiss by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari, in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred, where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Cowell.

> The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
> May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two > Guilty: nor that he suffer not more than him they try. Shakesp. Meas. for Measure.
>
> How innocent I was,
> His noble jury and foul cause can witness. Shakesp. H IV.
>
> Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bac.

JU'RYMAN. n. f. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.

> The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
> And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.
> No judge was known, upon or off the bench, to use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests of any one single juryman, much less of a whole jury. Swift's Miscel.

JU'RYMAST. n. f. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast lost in a fight, or by a storm; be some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the mizen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a hard shift to sail. Harris.

JUST. adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Latin.]

> Just to the tale, as present at the fray,
> Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.
>
> Once on a time La Mancha's knight, they say,
> A certain bard encountering on the way,
> Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
> As ere could Dennis of the laws o' th' stage. Pope.
>
> Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Watts's Logick.

4. Virtuous, innocent; pure.

> Noah was a just man, and perfect. Gen. vi. 9.
> How should man be just with God? Job x. 2.
> A just man falleth seven times and riseth. Prov. xxv. 16.
> He shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Mat. xiv. 14.
>
> The just th' unjust to serve. Milton.

5. True, not forged; not falsely imputed; well grounded.

> Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit. Hooker.
>

JUST. n. s. [joute, French.] Mock encounter on horseback; tilt, tournament.

None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than justs, both with sword and launce Sidney.

What news from Oxford? hold those justs and triumphs?
Shakespeare's Richard II.

Among themselves the tourney they divide,
In equal squadrons rang'd on either side;
Then turn'd their horses heads, and man to man,
And steed to steed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryden.

To JUST. v. n. [jouster, French.]

1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.

2. To push; to drive, to jostle.

JUSTICE. n. s. [justice, French; justitia, Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due.

O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam. xv. 4.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
I have no relish of them. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Locke.

2. Vindicative retribution; punishment.

Thus shews you are above
You justices, that these our nether crimes
So speedily can venge. Shakesp. King Lear.

He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut. xxxiii. 21

Examples of justice must be made, for terror to some, examples of mercy, for comfort to others: the one procures fear, and the other love. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

3. Right, assertion of right.

Draw thy sword,
That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakesp. King Lear.

4. [Justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment. Cowel

And thou, Ezras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria 1 Esdr. viii. 23

5. JUSTICE of the King's Bench. [justiciarius de Banco Regis] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest; wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Angliæ. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them. Cowel.

Give that whipster his errand,
He'll take my lord chief justice' warrant.

6. JUSTICE of the Common Pleas. [justiciarius communium placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum. He with his associates originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law, that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowel.

7. JUSTICE of the Forest [justiciarius Foresteæ.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert: of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowel.

8. JUSTICES of Assize [justiciarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into every or that country to take assises; the ground of which power was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorised and sent down to them. Cowel.

9. JUSTICES in Eyre [justiciarii itinerantes] Are so termed of the French eyre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties, to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the king's bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. [illegible]

10. JUSTICES of Gaol Delivery. [justiciarii ad gaolas deliberandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprise those prisoners, that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assise were likewise authorised to this. Cowel.

11. JUSTICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assise; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day nisi prius justiciarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas, and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius, as well as justices of assise, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowel.

12. JUSTICES of Peace. [justiciarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Cowel.

The justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakesp. As you like it.

Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The justices of peace are of great use. anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

I sing no harm
To officer, juggler, or justice of peace. Donne.

To JUSTICE v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. A word not in use.

As for the title of proscription, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath usurped himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended, for intending to poison the young queen of Scots, the king delivered him to the French king, to be justiced by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

A man may more justifiably throw cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke.

JUSTIFICATION. n. s. [justification, French, justificatio, low Latin.]

1. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support; absolution from guilt

I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue Shakesp. King Lear.

Among these rural amusements, in justification of absolute one of a singular nature. Swift.

2. Deliverance by pardon from sins past. Clarke.

In such rapturous fits
To them by faith imputed, they may find
Justification toward God, and peace
Of conscience. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. xi.

This the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare aptness of faith to bring forth works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth Hammond

JU'STIFICATOR. n. s. [from justify] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JU'STIFIER. n. s. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Rom. iii. 26.

To JU'STIFY. v. a. [justifier, French, justificare, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.

The law
I cannot justify Shakesp. H. VI.

They say, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners, but wisdom is justified of her children. Matt. xi.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? Job xxv. 4.

There is an exquisite subtlety, and the same is unjust, and there is a wise man that justifieth in judgment. Eccluf. x. 25

You're neither justified, nor yet accused. Dryden.

2. To maintain, to defend; to vindicate

L.

L, A liquid conſonant, which preſerves always the ſame ſound in Engliſh. In the Saxon it was aſpirated a plap, loaf, ploeſcy, lady.

At the end of a monoſyllable it is always doubled; as, ſhall; ſtill; full, except after a diphthong; as, fail, feel, veal; cool. In a word of more tyllables it is written ſingle; as, channel; canal; tendril. It is ſometimes put before r, and ſounded feebly after it, as bible, title.

LA. interject. [corrupted by an effeminate pronunciation from lo.] See; look; behold.

La you! if you ſpeak ill of the devil,
How he takes it at heart. Shakeſ. Twelfth Night.

LA'BDANUM. n. ſ. A reſin of the ſofter kind, of a ſtrong and not unpleaſant ſmell, and an aromatick, but not agreeable taſte. This juice exſudates from a low ſpreading ſhrub, of the ciſtus kind, in Crete, and the neighbouring iſlands; and the Grecian women make balls of it with a ſmall admixture of ambergreaſe, by way of a perfume. It was formerly uſed externally in medicine, but is now neglected. Hill.

To LA'BEFY. v. a. [labefacio, Latin.] To weaken; to impair. Dict.

LA'BEL. n. ſ. [labellum, Latin.]

1. A ſmall ſlip or ſcrip of writing.

When wak'd, I found
This label on my boſom; whoſe contents
Is ſo from ſenſe in hardneſs, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

2. Any thing appendant to a larger writing.

On the label of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impreſſed from the papal ſeal. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3 [In law.] A narrow ſlip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending ſeal. So alſo any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or teſtament, is called a label or codicil. Harris.

God join'd my heart to Romeo's, thou our hands;
And ere this hand by thee to Romeo ſeal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this ſhall ſlay them both. Shakeſpeare.

LA'BENT. adj. [labens, Lat.] Sliding; gliding, ſlipping. Dict.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of ſo great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wiſh than look for. Hooker.

You were wont to ſay,
If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and ſav'd
Your huſband ſo much ſweat. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

3. Exerciſe; motion with ſome degree of violence.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preſervation of health, and curing many initial diſeaſes, but the toil of the mind deſtroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

4. Childbirth; travail.

Sith of womens labours thou haſt charge,
And generation goodly doeſt enlarge
Incline thy will to effect our wiſhful vow. Spenſer. Epith.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of ſudden ſhootings, and of grinding pain;
My throws come thicker, and my cries encreas'd,
Which with her hand the conſcious nurſe ſuppreſs'd. Dryd.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour. Graunt

His heart is in continual labour; it even travails with the obſtagliori, and is in pangs 'till it be delivered. South's Serm.

The matter of the ceremonies had wrought, for the most part, only upon light-headed, weak men, whose satisfaction was not to be laboured for. Clarendon.
The pains of famish'd Tantalus shall feel,
And Sisyphus that labours up the hill,
The rowling rock in vain, and cursed Ixion's wheel. Dryd.
Had you requir'd my helpful hand,
Th' artificer and art you might command,
To labour arms for Troy. Dryden's Æneis.

An eager desire to know something concerning him, has occasioned mankind to labour the point under these disadvantages, and turn on all hands to see if there were any thing left which might have the least appearance of information. Pope's Essay on Homer.

2. To beat; to belabour.

Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a sturdy stroak. Dryden's Virg.

LA'BOURER. n. s. [labourer, French.]

1. One who is employed in coarse and toilsome work.

If a state run most to noblemen and gentlemen, and that the husbandmen be but as their work-folks and labourers, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable foot. Bacon.
The sun but seem'd the lab'rer of the year,
Each waxing moon supply'd her watry store,
To swell those tides, which from the line did bear
Their brimful vessels to the Belgian shore. Dryden.
Labourers and idle persons, children and striplings, old men and young men, must have divers diets. Arbuth. on Aliments.
Not balmy sleep to lab'rers fast with pain,
Nor showr's to larks, or sun-shine to the bee,
Are half so charming, as thy sight to me. Pope's Autumn.
Yet hence the poor are clothed, the hungry fed,
Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The lab'rer bears. Pope, Ep. iv. l. 167.

The prince cannot say to the merchant, I have no need of thee, nor the merchant to the labourer, I have no need of thee. Swift's Miscel.

2. One who takes pains in any employment.

Sir, I am a true labourer, I earn that I eat; get that I wear, owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness. Shakesp.
The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the lab'rer's toil, returning still Is love. Granville

2. An illuſtrious or eminent woman

O fooliſh fury's ſon, what fury mad
Hath thee tranſported to haſte thy doleful fate?
Were it not better I that lady had,
Than that thou haſt procured it too late?
I love and hate her, for ſhe's fair and royal
And that ſhe hath all courtly parts more exquiſite
Than lady ladies uſually, wanting from each one
The beſt ſhe hath, and ſhe of all compounded
Outſtrips them all. Shakeſpeare's Cymbe

Before Homer's time this great lady was never heard of [illegible]

May every lady an Evadne prove,

And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind. Shakesp.

Such court guise,
As Mercury did first devise,
With the mincing Dryades,
On the lawns, and on the leas. Milton.

LEAD. n. s. [læd, Saxon]

1. Lead is the heaviest metal except gold; for, though it is considerably lighter than quicksilver, as this wants malleability, it ought not to be reckoned in the class of metals. Lead is the softest of all the metals, and very ductile, though less so than gold: it is very little subject to rust, and the least sonorous of all the metals except gold. The specifick gravity of lead is to that of water as 11322 to 1000. Lead, when kept in fusion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except Mercury, which will not bear that degree of heat, it afterwards vitrifies with the baser metals, and carries them off, in form of scoriæ, to the sides of the vessel. The weakest acids are the best solvents for lead: it dissolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as also in vinegar. Gold, or silver, or copper, become brittle on being mixed with lead in fusion; and, if lead and tin be melted together, the tin is thrown up to the surface in little dusty globes. Lead is found in various countries, but abounds particularly in England, in several kinds of soils and stones. The smoke of the lead works at Mendip in Somersetshire is a prodigious annoyance, and subjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal disease; trees that grow near them have their tops burnt, and their leaves and outsides discoloured and scorched. Hill.

Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Of lead, some I can shew you so like silver, and so unlike common lead ore, that the workmen cannot see it. Boyle.

Lead is employed for the refining of gold and silver by the cupel, hereof is made common cerus with vinegar, of cerus, red lead, of plumbum ustum, the best yellow ochre; of lead, and half as much tin, solder for lead. Grew.

2. [In the plural.] Flat roof to walk on.

Stairs, balks, windows,
Are smother'd up, leads filled, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I would have the tower two stories, and goodly leads upon the top, raised with flames interposed. Bacon.

To LEAD v. a. [from the noun.] To fit with lead any manner.

He fashioneth the clay with his arm, he applieth himself to lead it over, and he is diligent to make clean the furnace. Ecclus. xxxviii. 30.

There is a traverse placed in a loft, at the right hand of the chair, with a privy door, and a carved window of glass leaded with gold and blue, where the mother sitteth. Bacon.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, he leadeth me beside the still waters. Psal. xxiii. 2.

3. To conduct as head or commander.

Would you lead forth your army against the enemy, and seek him where he is to fight? Spenser on Ireland.

He turns head against the lion's armed jaws,
And being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads antient lords, and reverend bishops, on
To bloody battles. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

I wonder much,
Being men of such great leading as you are,
That you foresee not what impediments
Drag back our expedition. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

If thou wilt have
The leading of thy own revenges, take
One half of my commission, and set down
As best thou art experienc'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He led me on to mightiest deeds,
Against the uncircumcis'd, our enemies:
But now hath cast me off. Milton's Agonistes.

With all the ſize that verity
Would without lapſing ſuffer; nay, ſometimes,
Like to a bowler upon a ſubtle ground
I've tumbl'd paſt the throw, and in his praiſe
Have almoſt ſtampt the leaſing. Shakeſ. Coriolanus.
As foxes, quoth Richard, prone to leaſing,
Say things at firſt, becauſe they're pleaſing;
Then prove what they have once aſſerted,
Nor care to have their lie deſerted
Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.
Trading free ſhall thrive again,
Nor leaſings lewd affright the ſwain. Gay's Paſtorals

To be under the lee of the ſhore, is to be cloſe under the weather ſhore. A leeward ſhip is one that is not ſaſt by a wind, to make her way ſo good as ſhe might. To lay a ſhip by the lee, is to bring her ſo that all her ſails may lie againſt the maſts and ſhrowds flat, and the wind to come right on her broadſide, ſo that ſhe will make little or no way. Diet.

If we, being ſtorm beaten in the bay of Biſcay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our tranſporting ſhips with our men of war, we had taken the Indian fleet, and the Azores. Raleigh's Apology.

The Hollanders were wont to ride before Dunkirk with the wind at north weſt, making a lee ſhore in all weathers. Raleigh's Eſſays.

Unprovided of tackling and victualling, they are forced to ſea by a ſtorm, yet better do ſo than venture ſplitting and ſinking on a lee ſhore. King Charles

Him,

Him, haply ſlumb'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of ſome ſmall night-founder'd ſkiff,
Deeming ſome iſland, oft, as ſeamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his ſcaly rind,
Moors by his ſide under the lee, while night
Inveſts the ſea. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. i.
Batter'd by his lee they lay,
The paſſing winds through their torn canvaſs play. Dryden.

LEECH. n. ſ. [læc, Saxon.]

1. A phyſician; a profeſſor of the art of healing: whence we ſtill uſe cowleech.
A leech, the which had great inſight
In that diſeaſe of grieved conſcience,
And well could cure the ſame; his name was patience.
Spenſer's Fairy Queen, b. i.
Her words prevail'd, and then the learned leach
His cunning hand 'gan to his wounds to lay,
And all things elſe the which his art did teach. Fa. Qu.
Phyſick is their bane.
The learned leeches in deſpair depart,
Wiſe leeches will not vain receipts obtrude:
Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill,
Till ſome ſafe criſis. Dryden.
The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd and toil'd,
Tried every health reſtoring herb and gum,
And wearied out his painful ſkill in vain. Rowe's J. Shore.
A ſkilful leech,
They ſay, had wrought this bleſſed deed;
This leech Arbuthnot was yclept. Gay's Paſtorals.

LE'GACY. n. f. [legatum, Latin.]

Legacy is a particular thing given by last will and testament. Cowell.

If there be no such thing apparent upon record, they do as if one should demand a legacy by force and virtue of some written testament, wherein there being no such thing specified, he pleadeth that there it must needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good will which always the testator bore him; imagining, that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it, which other men can no-where by reading find. Hooker, b. m.

Go you to Cæsar's house;
Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies. Shakesp. J. Cæsar.

Good counsel is the best legacy a father can leave a child. L'Estrange's Fables.

When he thought you gone
T' augment the number of the blest above,
He deem'd 'em legacies of royal love;
Nor arm'd, his brothers portions to invade,
But to defend the present you had made. Dryden.

When the heir of this vast treasure knew,
How large a legacy was left to you,
He wisely ty'd it to the crown again. Dryden.

Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

LE'GAL. adj. [legal, French; legis, Latin.]

Men of his way ſhould be moſt liberal,
They're ſet here for examples. Shakeſp. Henry VIII

That made us, and for us this ample world,
Be infinitely good, and of his good
As liberal and free, as infinite. Milton

There is no art better than to be liberal of praiſe and commendation to others, in that wherein a man's ſelf hath any perfection. Bacon's Eſſays.

The liberal are ſecure alone;
For what we frankly give, for ever is our own. Granville.

Several clergymen, otherwiſe little fond of obſcure terms, are, in their ſermons, very liberal of all thoſe which they find in eccleſiaſtical writers, as if it were our duty to underſtand them. Swift.

LIBERA'LITY. n. ſ. [liberalitas, Latin, liberalité, Fr.] Munificence; bounty, generoſity, generous profuſion.

Why ſhould he deſpair, that knows to court
With words, fair looks, and liberality? Shakeſpeare.

Such moderation with thy bounty join,
That thou may'ſt nothing give that is not thine;
That liberality is but caſt away,
Which makes us borrow what we cannot pay. Denham.

LIBERA'LLY. adv. [from liberal.] Bounteouſly; bountifully, largely.

If any of you lack wiſdom, let him aſk of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. James i. 5

LI'BERTINE. n. ſ. [libertin, French.]

1. One unconfined, one at liberty.

To ſteal his ſweet and honied ſentences. Shakeſp. Hen. V.

2. One who lives without reſtraint or law

Man, the lawleſs libertine, may rove
Free and unqueſtioned. Rowe's Jane Shore.

Want of power is the only bound that a libertine puts to his views upon any of the ſex. Clariſſa

2. One who pays no regard to the precepts of religion.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakespeare.

That word may be applied to some few libertines in the audience. Collier's View of the Stage.

3. [In law; libertinus, Lat.] A freedman; or rather, the son of a freedman

Some persons are forbidden to be accusers on the score of their sex, as women; others on the score of their age, as pupils and infants; others on the score of their conditions, as libertines against their patrons. Ayliffe's Parergon.

LIBERTINE. n. f. [libertin, French] Incontinent, irreligious person.

There are men that marry not, but chuse rather a libertine and impure single life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.

Might not the queen make diligent enquiry, if any person about her should happen to be of libertine principles or morals. Swift's Project for Advancement of Religion.

LIBERTINISM. n. f. [from libertine] Irreligion; licentiousness of opinions and practice

That spirit of religion and strictness vanished at once, and a spirit of liberty and libertinism, of infidelity and profaneness, started up in the room of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

LIBERTY. n. f. [liberté, French; libertas, Latin.]

1. Freedom, as opposed to slavery.

My master knows of your being here, and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it, for he swears, he'll turn me away. Shakespeare.

O liberty! thou goddess, heav'nly bright!
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight,
Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign. Addison.

2. Freedom, as opposed to necessity.

Liberty is the power in any agent to do, or forbear, any particular action, according to the determination, or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other. Locke.

As in the motions of the body, so it is in the thoughts of [illegible] where any one is such, that we have power to take it up, or lay it by, according to the preference of the [illegible], there we are [illegible]. Locke.

3. Privilege, exemption, [illegible]

His majesty gave [illegible] liberty to any, much less the grant [illegible] extraordinary Diet. 4. Davies.

4. [illegible] not of restraint.

[illegible] take the liberty to consider a third ground, which, with some men, has the same authority. Locke.

LIBIDINOUS. n. f. [libidinosus, Latin.] Lewd, lustful.

[illegible] not to lust, because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her, but because they are much more restrained from the perpetration of their lusts. If wanton glances and libidinous thoughts had been permitted by the gospel, they would have apostatized nevertheless. Bentley.

LIBIDINOUSLY adv. [from libidinous.] Lewdly; lustfully.

LIBRAL. [libralis, Latin] Of a pound weight. Dict.

LIBRARIAN. n. f. [librarius [illegible]]

1. One who has the care of a library.

2. One who transcribes or copies books.

Charybdis thrice swallows, and thrice refunds, the waves: this must be understood of regular tides. There are indeed but two tides in a day, but this is the error of the librarians. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey

LIBRARY. n. f. [librarie, Fr.] A large collection of books, public or private.

Then as they 'gan his library to view,
And antique registers for to avise,
There chanced to the prince's hand to rise
An ancient book, hight Briton's monuments. Fa. Qu.

Make choice of all my library,
And so beguile thy sorrow. Shakesp. Titus Andronicus.

I have given you the library of a painter, and a catalogue of such books as he ought to read. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To LIBRATE. v. a. [libro, Latin.] To poise; to balance; to hold in equipoise

LIBRATION. n. f. [libratio, Latin; libration, French]

1. The state of being balanced.

This is what may be said of the balance, and the libration, of the body. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Their pinions stick
In loose libration stretch'd, to trust the void
Trembling refuse. Thomson's Spring.

In astronomy]

Libration is the [illegible] lancing motion or trepidation in the firmament, whereby the declination of the sun, and the latitude of the stars, change from time to time. Astronomers likewise ascribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that, at full moon, they sometimes discover parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times. These kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Besides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libration, and which consists in this, that when the moon is at her greatest elongation from the south, her axis being then almost perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptick, the sun must enlighten towards the north pole of the moon some parts which he did not before, and that, on the contrary, some parts of those which he enlightened towards the opposite pole are obscured, and this produces the same effect which the libration in latitude does. Diet. Trev.

Those planets which move upon their axis, do not all make intire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of libration, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis. Grew.

LIBRATORY. adj [from libra, Lat.] Balancing, playing like a balance.

LICE, the plural of louse.

Red blisters rising on their paps appear,
And flaming carbuncles, and noisome sweat,
And clammy dews, that loathsome lice beget;
Till the slow creeping evil eats his way. Dryden's Virg.

LICEBANE. n. f. [lice and bane] A plant.

LICENSE. n. f. [licentia, Latin; licence, French.]

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and necessary restraint.

Some of the wiser seeing that a popular licence is indeed the many-headed tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Masidorus their chief. Sidney.

Taunt my faults
With such full licence, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

They bawl for freedom in their senseless moods,
And still revolt when truth would set them free,
Licence they mean, when they cry liberty. Milton.

The privilege that ancient poets claim,
Now turn'd to license by too just a name. Roscommon.

Though this be a state of liberty, yet it is not a state of licence; though man, in that state, have an uncontroulable liberty to dispose of his person or possessions, yet he has not liberty to destroy himself. Locke.

2. A grant of permission.

They sent some to bring them a licence from the senate Judith xv

Those few abstract names that the schools forged, and [illegible] into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get [illegible] tance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

We procured a licence of the duke of Parma to enter the theatre and gallery. Addison on Italy

3. Liberty; permission.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself. Acts.

To LICENSE. v. a. [licencier, French]

1. To set at liberty.

He would play well, and willingly, at some games of greatest attention, which shewed, that when he listed he could license his thoughts. Wotton.

The licentiates somewhat licentiously, least they should prejudice poetical liberty, will pardon themselves for doubling or rejecting a letter, if the sense fall aptly. Camden.

2. A degree in Spanish universities.

A man might, after that time, sue for the degree of a licentiate or master in this faculty. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To LICENTIATE. v. a. [licentier, French.] To permit; to encourage by license.

We may not hazard either the stifling of generous inclinations, or the licentiating of any thing that is coarse. L'Estrange.

LICENTIOUS. n. f. [licencieux, French; licentiosus, Latin.]

1. Unrestrained by law or morality.

Later ages pride, like corn-fed steed,
Abus'd her plenty, and fat swoln encrease,
To all licentious lust, and gan exceed
The measure of her mean, and natural first need. Fa. Qu.

How would it touch thee to the quick,
Should'st thou but hear I were licentious?
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
With ruffian lust should be contaminate. Shakespeare.

2. Presumptuous, unconfined.

The Tyber, whose licentious waves,
So often overflow'd the neighbouring fields,
Now runs a smooth and inoffensive course. Roscommon

LICENTIOUSLY adv. [from licentious] With too much liberty; without just restraint

The licentiates somewhat licentiously, least they should prejudice poetical liberty, will pardon themselves for doubling [illegible]

LICE'NTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from licentious] Boundless liberty, contempt of just restraint.

One error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained. Ral.

This custom has been always looked upon, by the wisest men, as an effect of licentiousness, and not of liberty Swift

During the greatest licentiousness of the press, the character of the queen was insulted. Swift.

LICH. n. f. [ɹice, Saxon.] A dead carcase; whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; Lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordshire, so named from martyred christians. Salve magna parens. Lichwake is still retained in Scotland in the same sense.

Voluptuous men sacrifice all substantial satisfactions to a liquorish palate. L'Estrange.

2. Eager, greedy.

Then is never tongue-tied, where fit commendation, whereof womankind is so lickerish, is offered unto it. Sidney.

Strephon, fond boy, delighted, did not know
That it was love that shin'd in shining maid;
But lick'rous, poison'd, fain to her would go. Sidney.

Certain rare manuscripts, sought in the most remote parts by Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, had been left to his widow, and were upon sale to the jesuits, liquorish chapmen of all such ware. Wotton.

In vain he proffer'd all his goods to save
His body, doom'd to that living grave;
The liquorish hag rejects the pelf with scorn,
And nothing but the man would serve her turn. Dryden.

In some provinces they were so liquorish after man's flesh, that they would suck the blood as it run from the dying man. Locke.

3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite.

Would'st thou seek again to trap me here
With lickerish baits, fit to ensnare a brute? Milton.

LICKERI'SHNESS. n. f. [from lickerish.] Nicenes of palate.

LICORICE n. f. [γλυκυῤῥίζα, liquirizia, Italian; glycyrrhiza, Latin.] A root of sweet taste

Liquorice hath a papilionaceous flower; the pointal which arises from the empalement becomes a short pod, containing several kidney shaped seeds; the leaves are placed by pairs joined to the mid-rib, and are terminated by an odd lobe. Miller.

Liquorice root is long and slender, externally of a dusky reddish brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, void of smell, and of a taste sweeter than sugar, it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain, and Germany This root is excellent in coughs, and all disorders of the lungs. The inspissated juice of this root is brought to us from Spain and Holland, from the first of which places it obtained the name of Spanish juice. Hill's Materia Medica.

LICTOR n. f. [Latin] A beadle that attended the consuls to apprehend or punish criminals.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like strumpets. Shakes. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Lictors and rods the ensigns of their power Milton.

Democritus could feed his spleen, and shake
His sides and shoulders till he felt 'em ake,
Though in his country-town no lictors were,
Nor rods, nor ax, nor tribune. Dryden's Juvenal

LID. [hlio, Saxon, lied, German.]

1. A cover, any thing that shuts down over a vessel; a lid, cover, or stopple that enters the mouth.

Hope, instead of flying off with the rest, stuck so close to the lid of the cup, that it was shut down upon her Addison.

2. The membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.

Do not for ever with thy veiled lids,
Seek for thy noble father in the dust. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Our eyes have lids, our ears still ope we keep. Davies.

The heads fair eyes few her, and saw no more,
But shut their flow'ry lids for ever night,
And winter strew'd her way. Crashaw.

That eye dropp'd sense distinct and clear,
As any muse's tongue could speak;
When from its lid a pearly tear
Ran trickling down her beauteous cheek. Prior.

The rod of Hermes
To sleep could mortal eye-lids fix,
And drive departed souls to Styx
That rod was just a type of Sid's,
Which o'er a British senate's lids
Could scatter opium full as well,
And drive as many souls to hell. Swift.

LIE. n. f. [lie, French.] Any thing impregnated with some other body, as, soap or salt.

Chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach. Shakespeare.

All liquid things concocted by heat become yellow, as, lye, wort, &c. Peacham on Drawing.

LIE. n. f. [ligge, Saxon.]

1. A criminal falsehood.

My name's Macbeth.
—The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.
—No, nor more fearful.
—Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword
I'll prove the lie thou speak'st. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

A lye is properly an outward signification of something contrary to, or at least beside, the inward sense of the mind: so that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant, or intended, that is properly a lye. South.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will; and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lie, than the will can chuse an apparent evil. Dryden.

When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, this is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his error; this is the primary idea: but if I say it is a lie, the word lie carries also a secondary idea; for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watts's Logick.

2. A charge of falsehood

That lie shall lye so heavy on my sword,
That it shall render vengeance and revenge;
Till thou the lie-giver, and that lie, rest
In earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shakes. Rich. II.

It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knew to be true. Locke.

Men will give their own experience the lye, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with these tenets. Locke.

3. A fiction.

The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply,
The truth is moral, though the tale a lie. Dryden.

TO LIE v. n. [leogan, Saxon; liegen, Dutch.]

1. To utter criminal falsehood.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakespeare's Othello.

If a soul lye unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, he shall restore that which was delivered Levit vi. 1.

Should I lye against my right? Job xxxiv. 6.

Inform us, will the emp'ror treat?
Or do the prints and papers lye? Pope.

1. To rest horizontally, or with very great inclination against something else.

2. To rest, to lean upon.

Death lies on her like an untimely flow'r;
Upon the sweetest flow'r of all the field. Shakespeare.

Lie heavy on him, earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee Epitaph on Vanbrugh

To be repoſited in the grave.

All the kings of the nations lie in glory, every one in his own houſe. Iſa. xiv. 18.

I will lie with my fathers, and thou ſhalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in your burying place. Gen. xlvii. 30.

4. To reſt in a ſtate of decumbiture.

Many good young princes would do ſo; their fathers lying ſo ſick as yours at this time is. Shakeſ. Henry IV.

My little daughter lieth at the point of death, I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that ſhe may be healed. Mark v. 23.

5. To paſs the time of ſleep.

The watchful traveller,
That by the moon's miſtaken light did riſe,
Lay down again, and clos'd his weary eyes. Dryden.
Forlorn he muſt, and perſecuted flie;
Camb the ſteep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

6. To be laid up or repoſited.

I have ſeen where copperas is made great variety of them, divers of which I have yet lying by me. Boyle.

7. To remain fixed.

The Spaniards have but one temptation to quarrel with us, the recovering of Jamaica, for that has ever lien at their hearts. Temple.

8. To reſide.

If thou doeſt well, ſhalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doeſt not well, ſin lieth at the door. Gen. iv.

9. To be placed or ſituated.

We have gone through deſerts, where there lay no way. Wiſd v. 7.

I fly
To thoſe happy climes that lie,
Where day never ſhuts his eye,

2. Present state.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
So like, that we may take the one for t'other!
Dream of a shadow! a reflection made
From the false glories of the gay reflected bow,
Is more a solid thing than thou!
Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities;
Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain,
But, broken and o'erwhelm'd, the ocean meets again.
Cowley.

When I consider life 'tis all a cheat,
Yet fool'd by hope men favour the deceit,
Live on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's falser than the former day;
Lies more, and when it says we shall be blest
With some new joy, takes off what we possest.
Strange cozenage! none would live past years again,
Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain,
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give
I'm tir'd of waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

Howe'er 'tis well that while mankind
Through life's perverse meanders errs,

Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss them;
He would not then have touch'd them for his life. Shakesp.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom where no pity!
No friends! no hope! no kindred weep for me!
Almost no grave allow'd me! like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field, and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head, and perish. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Arnus, a river of Italy, is drawn like an old man, by his right side a lion, holding forth in his right paw a red lily, or flower-de-luce. Peacham on Drawing

Take but the humblest lily of the field;
And if our pride will to our reason yield;
It must by sure comparison be shown,
That on the regal seat great David's son,
Array'd in all his robes, and types of pow'r,
Shines with less glory than that simple flow'r. Prior

Go, gentle gales, and bear my sighs along.
For her the feather'd quires forget their song,
For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.

2. The writ by which poſſeſſion is obtained.

3. The ſtate of being kept at a certain rate.

What livery is, we by common uſe in England know well enough, namely, that it is an allowance of horſe meat, as they commonly uſe the word ſtabling, as to keep horſes at livery; the which word, I gueſs, is derived of livering or delivering forth their nightly food, ſo in great houſes, the livery is ſaid to be ſerved up for all night, that is, their evening allowance for drink: and livery is alſo called the upper weed which a ſerving man wears; ſo called, I ſuppoſe, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleaſure: ſo it is apparent, that, by the word livery, is there meant horſe meat, like as by the cogny is underſtood man's meat. Some ſay it is derived of coin, for that they uſed in their cognies not only to take meat but money; but I rather think it is derived of the Iriſh, the which is a common uſe amongſt landlords of the Iriſh to have a common ſpending upon their tenants, who being commonly but tenants at will, they uſed to take of them what victuals they liſt; for of victuals they were wont to make a ſmall reckoning. Spenſer on Ire and.

4. The cloaths given to ſervants.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears. Sidney.

Perhaps they are by ſo much the more loth to forſake this argument, for that it hath, though nothing elſe, yet the name of ſcripture, to give it ſome kind of countenance more than the pretext of livery coats affordeth. Hooker.

I think, it is our way,
If we will keep in favour with the king,
To be her men, and wear her livery. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery,
That ſee I by our faces. Shakeſp. Timon of Athens.

Ev'ry lady cloath'd in white,
And crown'd with oak and laurel ev'ry knight,
Are ſervants to the leaf, by liveries known
Of innocence. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

On others intereſt her gay liv'ry flings,
Int'reſt that waves on party colour'd wings;
Turn'd to the ſun ſhe caſts a thouſand dyes,
And as ſhe turns the colours fall or riſe. Duncad.

If your dinner miſcarries, you were teazed by the footmen coming into the kitchen, and to prove it true, throw a ladleful of broth on one or two of their liveries. Swift.

5. A particular dreſs, a garb worn as a token or conſequence of any thing.

But to those men that sought him, sweet as Summer. Shak.

LOG. n. f. [The original of this word is not known. Skinner derives it from lyggan, Saxon, to lie; Junius from legge, Dutch, sluggish, perhaps the Latin lignum, is the true original.] A shapeless bulky piece of wood.

Would the lightning had
Burnt up those logs that you're injoin'd to pile. Shakesp.

The worms with many feet are bred under logs of timber, and many times in gardens, where no logs are. Bacon.

Some log, perhaps, upon the waters swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,

And hollow'd first a floating trough became,
And cross some rivulet passage did begin. Dryden

The frighted dame
The log in secret lock'd Dryden's Ovid

2. An Hebrew measure, which held a quarter of a cab, and consequently five-sixths of a pint. According to Dr. Arbuthnot it was a liquid measure, the seventy-second part of the bath or ephah, and twelfth part of the hin. Calmet.

A meat offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil. Lev. xiv. 10.

LO'GARITHMS. n. f. [logarithme, Fr. λόγος and ἀριθμος.]

Logarithms, which are the indexes of the ratios of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier lord Merchiston, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr. Briggs, Savilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of artificial numbers, contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proportion, as the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical one for instance,

0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
1	2	4	8	16	32	64	128	256	512

Where the numbers above, beginning with (0), and arithmetically proportional, are called logarithms. The addition and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and this saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by dividing the logarithms of any numbers for the square root, and trisecting them for the cube, and so on. Harris.

LO'GGATS n. f.

Loggats is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unlawful games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the same which is now called kittlepins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling. Hanmer.

Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with them. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

LO'GGERHEAD. n. f. [logge, Dutch, stupid and head, or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blockhead.] A dolt; a blockhead; a thickskull.

Where hast been, Hal?
With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or fourscore hogsheads. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other peoples fires. L'Estrange.

To fall to LOGGERHEADS. } To scuffle; to fight without weapons.
To go to LOGGERHEADS. }

A couple of travellers that took up an ass, fell to loggerheads which should be his master. L'Estrange.

LO'GGERHEADED. adj. [from loggerhead.] Dull; stupid; doltish.

You loggerheaded and unpolish'd groom, what! no attendance? Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

LO'GICK. n. f. [logique, French; logica, Latin, from λόγος.]

The art of reasoning.

Logick is the art of using reason well in our inquiries after truth, and the communication of it to others. Watts's Logick.

Talk logick with acquaintance,
And practise rhetorick in your common talk. Shakespeare.

By a logick that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom. Clarendon.

Here foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound,
There stript fair rhetorick languish'd on the ground. Pope.

LO'GICAL. adj. [from logick.]

1. Pertaining to logick; taught in logick.

The heretick complained greatly of St. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtilties. Hooker, b. i.

Those who in a logical dispute keep in general terms, would hide a fallacy. Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.

We ought not to value ourselves upon our ability, in giving subtile rules, and finding out logical arguments, since it would be more perfection not to want them. Baker.

2. Skilled in logick, furnished with logick.

A man who sets up for a critick, should have a clear and logical head. Addison's Spect. N° 291.

LO'GICALLY. adv. [from log] According to the laws of logick.

How can her old good man
With honour take her back again?
From hence I logically gather,
The woman cannot live with either. Prior.

LOGI'CIAN. n. f. [logicien, French; logicus, Latin.] A teacher or professor of logick; a man versed in logick.

If a man can play the true logician, and have as well judgment as invention, he may do great matters. Bacon.

If we may believe our logicians, man is distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter. Addison.

Each staunch polemick stubborn as a rock,
Each fierce logician still expelling Locke,
Came whip and spur. Dunciad, b. iv.

A logician

A logician might put a caſe that would ſerve for an exception. Swift

The Arabian phyſicians were ſubtle men, and moſt of them logicians; accordingly they have given method, and ſhed ſubtilty upon their author. Baker.

LO'GMAN. n. ſ. [log and man.] One whoſe buſineſs is to carry logs.

LO'GOMACHY n. ſ. [λογομαχία.] A contention in words; a contention about words.

Forced terms of art did much puzzle ſacred theology with diſtinctions, cavils, quiddities; and ſo transformed her to a meer kind of ſophiſtry and logomachy. Howel.

LO'GWOOD. n. ſ.

Logwood is of a very denſe and firm texture; it is brought to us in very large and thick blocks or logs, and is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep, ſtrong, red colour. It grows both in the Eaſt and Weſt Indies, but no where ſo plentifully as on the coaſt of the bay of Campeachy. It has been long known by the dyers, and was but lately introduced in medicine, and is found to be an excellent aſtringent. Hill's Mat. Med.

To make a light purple, mingle ceruſe with logwood water Peacham on Drawing.

LO'HOCK. n. ſ.

Lohock is an Arabian name for thoſe forms of medicines which are now commonly called Ecligma's, lambatives, or linctus's. Quincy.

LOIN. n. ſ. [lwyn, Welſh.]

1. The back of an animal carved out by the butcher.

2. Loins, the reins.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.
Thou ſlander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed iſſue of thy father's loins. Shakeſp. Rich. III.
Virgin mother, hail!
High in the love of heav'n! yet from my loins
Thou ſhalt proceed, and from thy womb the ſon
Of God moſt high. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. xii.
A multitude! like which the populous north
Pour'd never from her frozen loins, to paſs
Rhene, or the Danaw, when her barbarous ſons
Came like a deluge on the ſouth. Milton.

To LO'ITER. v. n. [loteren, Dutch.] To linger; to ſpend time carelefsly, to idle.

Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take ſoldiers up in the countries. Shakeſpeare.
Whence this long delay?
You loiter, while the ſpoils are thrown away. Dryden.
Mark how he ſpends his time, whether he unactively loiters it away. Locke.
If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the miſtake; if we have loitered, let us quicken our pace, and make the moſt of the preſent opportunity. Rogers's Sermons.

LO'ITERER. n. ſ. [from loiter.] A lingerer; an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without buſineſs, one who is ſluggiſh and dilatory.

Give gloves to thy reapers a largeſs to cry,
And daily to loiterers have a good eye. Tuſſer's Huſb.
The poor, by idleneſs or unthriftineſs, are riotous ſpenders, vagabonds, and loiterers. Hayward.
Where haſt thou been, thou loiterer?
Though my eyes cloſ'd, my arms have ſtill been open'd,
To ſearch if thou wert come. Otway.
Providence would only enter mankind into the uſeful knowledge of her treaſures, leaving the reſt to employ our induſtry, that we live not like idle loiterers and truants. More.
Ever liſtleſs loit'rers, that attend
No cauſe, no truſt, no duty, and no friend. Pope.

To LOLL. v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Perhaps it might be contemptuouſly derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not neceſſary to life are unlawful.]

1. To lean idly; to reſt lazily againſt any thing.

So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; ſo ſhakes and pulls me. Shakeſpeare's Otuello.
He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation Shakeſp. Rich. III.

And with his lolling tongue aſſay'd the taſte. Dryden.

To LOLL. v. a. To put out uſed of the tongue exerted.

All authors to their own defects are blind,
Hadſt thou but, Janus-like, a face behind,
To ſee the people, when ſplay mouths they make,
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
Their tongues loll'd out a foot. Dryden's Perſius.
By Strymon's freezing ſtreams he ſat alone,
Trees bent their heads to hear him ſing his wrongs,
Fierce tygers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues Dryden's Virg.
By the wolf were laid the marmal twins;
Intrepid on her ſwelling dugs they hung,
The foſter-dam loll'd out her fawning tongue. Dryden

Loord. n. [loerd, Dutch; from lourdant, French; lurdan, Erſe, a heavy, ſtupid, or witleſs fellow. D'Trevoux derives lourdant from lorde or lourde, a village in Gaſcoigny, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, ſay they. But dexterity in robbing implies ſome degree of ſubtilty, from which the Gaſcoigns are ſo far removed, that, at this day, they are aukward and heavy to a proverb. The Erſe imports ſome degree of knavery, but then it is uſed in a ludicrous ſenſe, as in Engliſh, you pretty rogue, though in general it denotes reproachful heavineſs, or ſtupid lazineſs. Spenſer's Schoiaſt ſays, loord was wont, among the old Britons, to ſignify a lord, and therefore the Danes, that uſurped their tyranny here in Britain, were called, for more dread than dignity, lurdans, i. e. lord Danes, whoſe inſolence and pride was ſo outrageous in this realm, that if it fortuned a Briton to be going over a bridge, and ſaw the Dane ſet foot upon the ſame, he muſt return back till the Dane was clean over, elſe he muſt abide no leſs than preſent death, but being afterward expelled, the name of lurdane became ſo odious unto the people whom they had long oppreſſed, that, even at this day, they uſe for more reproach to call the quartan ague the fever lurdane. So far the Scholiaſt, but erroneouſly. From Spenſer's own words, it ſignifies ſomething of ſtupid dulneſs rather than magiſterial arrogance. Mahean.] A drone

Siker, thou's but a lazy leord,
And rekes much of thy ſwinke,
That with fond terms and wideſs words
To bleer mine eyes do'ſt think. Spenſer's Paſtorals.

MA'GICK. n. ſ. [magia, Latin.]

1. The art of putting in action the power of ſpirits: it was ſuppoſed that both good and bad ſpirits were ſubject to magick; yet magick was in general held unlawful; ſorcery, enchantment.

She once being looſt,
The noble ruin of her magick, Antony,
Claps on his ſea-wing. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

What charm, what magick, can over-rule the force of all theſe motives. Rogers.

2. The ſecret operations of natural powers.

The writers of natural magick do attribute much to the virtues that come from the parts of living creatures, as if they did infuſe ſome immaterial virtue into the part ſevered. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

MA'GICK. adj. Acting or doing by powers ſuperior to the known power of nature; incantating, necromantick.

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound,
I'll catch it ere it come to ground
And that diſtill'd by magick ſlights
Shall raiſe ſuch artificial ſprights,
As by the ſtrength of their illuſion,
Shall draw him on to his confuſion. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

And the brute earth would lend her nerves, and ſhake
Till all thy magick ſtructures rear'd ſo high,
Were ſhatter'd into heaps. Milton.

Like caſtles built by magick art in air,
That vaniſh at approach, ſuch thoughts appear. Granville.

MAGI'CIAN. n. ſ. [magicus, Latin.] One ſkilled in magick; an enchanter; a necromancer.

What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To ſtop devoted charitable deeds. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

An old magician, that did keep
Th' Heſperian fruit, and made the dragon ſleep;
Her potent charms do troubled ſouls relieve,
And, where ſhe liſts, makes calmeſt ſouls to grieve. Waller.

There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know; as, whether Roger Bacon was a mathematician, or a magician. Locke.

He bids him attend as if he had the rod over him, and uſes a magiſterial authority while he inſtructs him. Dryden.

2. Lofty; arrogant; proud, inſolent; deſpotick.

We are not magiſterial in opinions, nor dictator like, obtrude our notions on any man. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Pretences go a great way with men that take fair words, and magiſterial looks, for current payment. L'Eſtrange.

Thoſe men are but trapanned who are called to govern, being inveſted with authority, but bereaved of power, which is nothing elſe but to mock and betray them into a ſplendid and magiſterial way of being ridiculous. South's Serm.

3. Chemically prepared, after the manner of a magiſtery.

Of corals are chiefly prepared the powder ground upon a marble, and the magiſterial ſalt, to good purpoſe, though the vers the tincture is no more than a ſolution of the magiſterial ſalt. Grew's Muſæum.

MAGISTE'RIALLY. n. ſ. [from magiſterial.] In an air of authority.

A downright adverſe may be miſtaken, as if it were ſpoken magiſterially. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Over their pots and pipes, claiming and engroſſing all theſe wholly to themſelves; magiſterially cenſuring the wiſdom of all antiquity, ſcoffing at all piety, and new modelling the world. South's Sermons.

MAGISTE'RIALNESS. n. ſ. [from magiſterial.] Haughtineſs, airs of a maſter.

Peremptorineſs is of two ſorts; the one a magiſterialneſs in matters of opinion, the other a poſitiveneſs in relating matters of fact: in the one we impoſe upon mens underſtandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue.

MA'GISTERY. n. ſ. [magiſterium, Latin.]

Magiſtery is a term made uſe of by chemiſts to ſignify ſometimes a very fine powder, made by ſolution and precipitation; as of biſmuth, lead, &c. and ſometimes reſins and reſinous ſubſtances; as thoſe of jalap, ſcamony, &c. but the moſt genuine acceptation is to expreſs that preparation of any body, wherein the whole, or moſt part, is, by the admixtion of ſomewhat, changed into a body of quite another kind, as when iron or copper is turned into cryſtals of Mars or Venus. Quincy.

Paracelſus extracteth the magiſtery of wine, expoſing it unto the extremity of cold; whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the ſpirit be uncongealed in the centre. Brown.

The magiſtery of vegetables conſiſts but of the more ſoluble and coloured parts of the plants that afford it. Boyle.

A foe had enough revenge'd, having reduc'd
Their lot to misery beneath their fears,
The rest was magnanimity to remit,
If some convenient ransom was propos'd. Milton's Agonist.

Expounding many things under the name of trifles, is a very false proof either of wisdom or magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame. Swift.

MAGNA'NIMOUS adj. [magnanimus, Latin.] Great of mind; elevated in sentiment, brave.

To give a kingdom hath been thought
Greater and nobler done, and to lay down
Far more magnanimous, than to affume. Milton's Par. Reg.

In strength
All mortals I excell'd, and great in hopes,
With youthful courage and magnanimous thoughts
Of birth from heaven foretold, and high exploits. Milton.

Magnanimous industry is a resolved assiduity and care, answerable to any weighty work. Grew's Cosmol.

MAGNA'NIMOUSLY. adv. [from magnanimous.] Bravely; with greatness of mind.

MA'NNA. n. f.

Manna is properly a gum, and is honey-like juice concreted into a solid form, seldom so dry but it adheres more or less to the fingers in handling its colour is whitish, yellowish, or brownish, and it has in taste the sweetness of sugar, and with it a sharpness that renders it very agreeable: we are supplied with manna from Calabria and Sicily, which is the product of two different trees, but which are of the same genus, being both varieties of the ash. when the heats of summer are free from rain, the leaves, the trunks, and branches of both these trees, exsudate a white honey juice, which concretes into what we call manna, forming itself as it runs, and according to its different quantity, into small roundish drops, or long flakes what flows out of the leaves of these trees is all natural, but the Italians procure a forced kind by wounding the trunks and branches the finest manna of all is that which oozes naturally out of the leaves in August, after the season of collecting the common manna is over. the French have another sort of manna, produced from the

the larch tree, of a very different genus of the afh, and the very tree which produces oil of turpentine; this is called Briançon manna, from the country where it is produced. our black thorn, or floe tree, fometimes yield a true manna from the ribs of the leaves in Autumn, but it is in a very fmall quantity: there is another fort called the manna Perfica, produced from a fmall prickly fhrub about four or five feet high, growing in Egypt, Armenia, Georgia, and Perfia. The Hebrews, who had been acquainted with the laft mentioned fort of manna, when they found a miraculous food in the defert refembling it, did not fcruple to call it manna: this was a conjecture the more natural to them, as they faw plainly that this defcended from the heavens in form of a dew, and concreted into the globules in which they found it; and the received opinion at that time was, that the Oriental manna was formed in the fame manner; that it was a dew from the clouds concreted on the plant, none fuppofing, in thofe early times, that it was the natural juice of the fhrub upon which it was found: it is however evident, that this was not of the nature of manna, becaufe it melted away as the fun grew hot, whereas manna hardens in that heat. It is but lately that the world were convinced of the miftake of manna being an aëria produce, by an experiment being made by covering a tree with fheets in the manna feafon, and the finding as much manna on it afterwards as on thofe which were open to the air and dew. Manna is celebrated, both by the ancients and moderns, as a gentle and mild cathartick. Hill.

It would be well inquired, whether manna doth fall but upon certain herbs, or leaves only. Bacon's Nat Hift

The manna in heaven will fuit every man's palate. Locke.

MANOR. n. f. [manoir, old French; manerium, low Latin; manner, Armorick.]

Manor fignifies, in common law, a rule or government which a man hath over fuch as hold land within his fee. Touching the original of thefe manors, it feems, that, in the beginning, there was a certain compafs or circuit of ground granted by the king to fome men of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercife fome jurifdiction, more or lefs, within that compafs, as he thought good to grant; performing him fuch fervices, and paying fuch yearly rent for the fame, as he by his grant required: and that afterward this great man parcelled his land to other meaner men, enjoining them again fuch fervices and rents as he thought good; and by that means, as he became tenant to the king, fo the inferiors became tenants to him: but thofe great men, or their pofterity, have alienated their mannors and lands to given them by their prince, and many for capital offences have forfeited them to the king; and thereby they thus remain in the crown, or are beftowed again upon others. But whofoever poffeffes thefe manors, the liberty belonging to them is real and predial, and therefore remains, though the owners be changed. In thefe days, a manor rather fignifies the jurifdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or fite for a man may have a manor in groſs, as the law terms it, that is, the right and intereft of a court-baron, with the perquifites thereto belonging. Cowel.

My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,

More hideous, when thou ſhew'ſt thee in a child,
Than the ſea monſter. Shakeſpeare's King Lear

MARCASITE. n. ſ.

The term marcaſite has been very improperly uſed by ſome for biſmuth, and by others for zink the more accurate writers however always expreſs a ſubſtance different from either of theſe by it, ſulphureous and metallick. The marcaſite is a ſolid hard foſſil, of an obſcurely and irregularly foliaceous ſtructure, of a bright glittering appearance, and naturally found in contained beds among the veins of ores, or in the fiſſures of ſtones: the variety of forms this mineral puts on is almoſt endleſs. as it is generally found among the ores of metals, it is frequently impregnated with particles of them, and of other foſſile bodies, and thence aſſumes various colours and degrees of hardneſs. There are however only three diſtinct ſpecies of it, one of a bright gold colour, another of a bright ſilver, and a third of a dead white the ſilvery one ſeems to be peculiarly meant by the writers on the Materia Medica. Marcaſite is very frequent in the mines of Cornwall, where the workmen call it mundick, but more ſo in Germany, where they extract vitriol and ſulphur from it, beſides which it contains a quantity of arſenick. Hill.

The writers of minerals give the name pyrites and marcaſites indifferently to the ſame ſort of body. I reſtrain the name of pyrites wholly to the nodules, or thoſe that are found lodged in ſtrata that are ſeparate. the marcaſite is part of the matter that either conſtitutes the ſtratum, or is lodged in the perpendicular fiſſures. Woodward Nat. Foſſils.

The acid fait diſſolved in water is the ſame with oil of ſulphur per campanam, and abounding much in the bowels of the earth, and particularly in marcaſites, unites itſelf to the other ingredients of the marcaſite, which are principally iron, copper, copper, and earth, and with them compounds a mi, vit iol, and fulphur: with the earth alone it compounds alum, wit the metal alone, or metal and earth together, it compounds vitriol; and with the bitumen and earth it compounds fulphur whence it comes to pass, that marcasites abound with those three minerals. Newton's Opticks.

Here marcasites in various figures wait,
To ripen to a true metallick ſtate. Garth's Diſpenſatory

The French king would have the diſpoſing of the marriage of Bretagne, with an exception, that he ſhould not marry her [illegible] Bacon.

Some married perſons, even in their marriage, do better pleaſe God than ſome virgins in their ſtate of virginity: they, by giving great example of conjugal affection, by preſerving their faith unbroken, and by educating children in the fear of God, pleaſe God in a higher degree than thoſe virgins whoſe piety is not anſwerable to their opportunities. Taylor.

I propoſe that Palamon ſhall be
In marriage join'd with beauteous Emily. Dryden.

MA'RRIAGE is often uſed in compoſition.

Neither her worthineſs, which in truth was great, nor his own ſuffering for her, which is wont to endear affection, could fetter his fickleneſs; but, before the marriage-day appointed, he had taken to wife Bracha, of whom ſhe complained. Sidney, b. [illegible]

I by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine. Shakeſp.

Thou ſhalt come into the marriage chamber. Tob. vi. 16

There on his arms and once lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.

To theſe whom death again did wed,
This grave's the ſecond marriage-bed.
For though the hand of fate could force
'Twixt ſoul and body a divorce,
It could not ſever man and wife,
Becauſe they both liv'd but one life. Crashaw.

MA[illegible]ET } n. f. [martinet, French.] A kind of ſwallow.

This gueſt of Summer,
The temple-haunting martlet does approve
By his lov'd manſionry, that heaven's breath
Smells woongly here. No jutting frieze,
Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle.
Where they moſt breed and haunt, I have obſerv'd
The air is delicate. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

As in a drought the thirſty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain;
Then firſt the martlet meets it in the ſky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden

MASK. n. f. [masque, French.]
1. A cover to disguise the face, a visor.

Now love pulled off his mask, and shewed his face unto her, and told her plainly that she was his prisoner. Sidney.

Since she did neglect her looking glass,
And throw her sun-expelling mask away,
The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shakespeare.

Could we suppose that a mask represented never so naturally the general humour of a character, it can never suit with the variety of passions that are incident to every single person in the whole course of a play. Addison on Italy.

2. Any pretence or subterfuge.

Too plain thy nakedness of soul espy'd,
When [illegible]
By masks of eloquence, and veils of pride? Prior.

Which was ordain'd, they should perform the deed. Daniel.
This thought might lead me through this world's vain mask
Content, though blind, had I no other guide. Milton.

5. A dramatick performance, written in a tragick style without attention to rules or probability.

Thus I have broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets in their pictures, poems, comedies, and masks. Peacham.

To MASK. v. a. [masquer, French.]
1. To disguise with a mask or visor.

What will grow out of such errors as go masked under the cloke of divine authority, impossible it is that ever the wit of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them. Hooker.

'Tis not my blood
Wherein thou see'st me masked. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was he;
But being mask'd he was not sure. Shakespeare.

The old Vatican Terence has, at the head of every scene, the figures of all the persons, with their particular disguises, and I saw in the Villa d'Matthei an antique statue masked, which was perhaps designed for Gnatho in the eunuch, for it agrees exactly with the figure he makes in the manuscript. Addison.

2. To cover; to hide.

I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakesp. Macbeth.

As when a piece of wanton lawn,
A thin aerial vail is drawn
O'er beauty's face, seeming to hide,
More sweetly shows the blushing bride:
A soul whose intellectual beams
No mists do mask, no lazy steams. Crashaw.

To MASK. v. n.
1. To revel, to play the mummer.

Thy gown? Why, ay; come, taylor, let us see't;

This army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince. Shakesp. Hamlet.

He discovered to me the richest mines which the Spaniards have, and from whence all the mass of gold that comes into Spain is drawn. Raleigh's Essays.

4. Congeries; assemblage indistinct.

The whole knowlege of groupes, of the lights and shadows, and of those masses which Titian calls a bunch of grapes, is, in the prints of Rubens, exposed clearly to the sight. Dryden.

At distance, through an artful glass,
To the mind's eye things well appear,
They lose their forms, and make a mass
Confus'd and black, if brought too near. Prior.

Where flowers grow, the ground at a distance seems covered with them, and we must walk into it before we can distinguish the several weeds that spring up in such a beautiful mass of colours. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Gross body, the general.

Comets have power over the gross and mass of things; but they are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects. Bacon's Essays.

Where'er thou art, he is; th' eternal mind
Acts through all places; is to none confin'd
Fills ocean, earth, and air, and all above,
And through the universal mass does move. Dryden.

The mass of the people have opened their eyes, and will not be governed by Colonus and Curio at the head of their myrmidons. Swift.

If there is not a sufficient quantity of blood and strength of circulation, it may infect the whole mass of the fluids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

6. [Missa, Latin.] The service of the Romish church.

Burnished gold is that manner of gilding which we see in old parchment and mass books, done by monks and priests, who were very expert herein Peacham on Drawing.

Make they, but of their brethren, men of men. Milton.

Slaughter grows murder, when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

2. Murder.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakesp. Rich. III.

To MA'SSACRE. v. a. [massacrer, French, from the noun.] To butcher; to slaughter indiscriminately.

I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction, and their family. Shakespeare.

Christian religion, now crumbled into factions, may, like dust, be irrecoverably dissipated, if God do not countermine us, or we recover so much sobriety as to forbear to massacre what we pretend to love. Decay of Piety.

After the miserable slaughter of the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem, they were scattered into all corners, oppressed and detested, and sometimes massacred and extirpated. Atterb.

MA'SSICOT. n. f. [French.]

Massicot is cerus calcined by a moderate degree of fire; of this there are three sorts, the white, the yellow, and that of a golden colour, their difference arising from the different degrees of fire applied in the operation. White massicot is of a yellowish white, and is that which has received the least calcination; yellow massicot has received more, and gold-coloured massicot still more; all of them should be an impalpable powder, weighty and high-coloured: they are used in painting. Trevoux.

MA'SSINESS. } n. f. [from massy, massive.] Weight; bulk,
M[illegible] }

It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision which he served in it, than for the massiness of the dish. Hakewill on Providence.

No sideboards then with gilded plate were press'd,
No sweating slaves with massive dishes dress'd Dryden.

The more gross and massive parts of the terrestrial globe, the strata of stone, owe their present order to the deluge. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

If these liquors or glasses were so thick and massy that no light could get through them, I question not but that they would, like all other opaque bodies, appear of one and the same colour in all positions of the eye. Newton's Opticks.

Th' intrepid Theban hears the burst ing sky,
Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
And views astonish'd from the hills afar,
The floods descending, and the wat'ry war. Pope's Statius.

Swift the signal giv'n,
They start away, and sweep the massy mound
That runs around the hill Thomson's Spring.

MAST. n. f. [mæst, mat, French; mæst, Saxon.]

Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,
His vessel moor'd. Dryden's Homer.

2. The fruit of the oak and beech.

The oaks bear masts, the briars scarlet hips:
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush
Lays her full mess before you. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

Trees that bear mast, and nuts, are more lasting than those that bear fruits; as oaks and beeches last longer than apples and pears. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 583.

When sheep fed like men upon acorns, a shepherd drove his flock into a little oak wood, and up he went to shake them down some mast. L'Estrange's Fables.

The

The breaking down an old frame of government, and erecting a new, seems like the cutting down an old oak and planting a young one: it is true, the grandson may enjoy the shade and the mast, but the planter, besides the pleasure of imagination, has no other benefit Temple's Miscel.

As a savage boar,
With forest mast and fattening marshes fed
When once he sees himself in toils inclos'd,
Whets his tusks Dryden.
Wond'ring dolphins o'er the palace glide;
On leaves and mast of mighty oaks they brouze,
And their broad fins entangle in the boughs Dryden.

METEOR. n. ſ. [meteore, Fr. μετεωρα.] Any bodies in the air or ſky that are of a flux and tranſitory nature.

Look

Look'd he or red, or pale, or ſad, or merrily?
What obſervation mad'ſt thou in this caſe,
Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face? Shakeſpeare.

She began to caſt with herſelf from what coaſt this blazing ſtar muſt rise upon the horizon of Ireland, for there had the like meteor ſtrong influence before. Bacon's Henry VII.

Theſe burning fits but meteors be,
Whoſe matter in thee ſoon is ſpent.
Thy beauty, and all parts which are in thee,
Are an unchangeable firmament. Donne.

Then flaming meteors, hung in air, were ſeen,
And thunders rattled through a ſky ſerene. Dryden's Æn.

Why was I raiſ'd the meteor of the world,
Hung in the ſkies, and blazing as I travel'd,
Till all my fires were ſpent; and then caſt downward
To be trod out by Cæſar? Dryden's All for Love.

O poet, thou haſt been diſcreteer,
Hanging the monarch's hat ſo high,
If thou hadſt dubb'd thy ſtar a meteor,
Which did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.

METEOROLO'GICAL. adj. [from meteorology.] Relating to the doctrine of meteors

METHO'UGHT, the preterite of methinks. See METHINKS and MESEEMS. I thought, it appeared to me. I know not that any author has miſſeemed, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from meſeems.

Methought, a ſerpent eat my heart away,
And you ſat ſmiling at his cruel prey. Shakeſpeare.

Since I ſought
By pray'r th' offended deity t' appeaſe,
Kneel'd, and before him humbled all my heart.
Methought, I ſaw him placable, and mild,
Bending his ear: perſuaſion in me grew
That I was heard with favour; peace return'd
Home to my breaſt; and to my memory
His promiſe, "That thy ſeed ſhall bruiſe our foe." Milt.

In theſe

Upon this heaviness of the king's forces, interpreted to be fear and want of mettle, divers resorted to the seditious. Heyward's Edw. VI

He had given so frequent testimony of signal courage in several actions, that his mettle was never suspected. Clarendon.

'Tis more to guide than spur the muse's steed,
Restrain his fury, than provoke his speed;
The winged courser, like a generous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course. Pope

2. Substance: this at least should be mettle.

Oh thou! whose self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puft,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue. Shakespeare.

METTLED. adj. [from mettle.] Sprightly; courageous, full of ardour; full of fire.

Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never. Ben Jonson.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison.

METTLESOME. adj. [from mettle.] Sprightly; lively, gay; brisk, airy; fiery; courageous.

Their force differs from true spirit, as much as a vicious from a mettlesome horse. Tatler, N°. 61

The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up
Your tender kinsman. Shakesp. King John.

[illegible], question your desires,
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a [illegible],
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon. Shakesp

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakespeare.

Feign them sick,
Close mew'd in their sedans, for fear of air Dryden's Juv.

It is not possible to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all his life mew him up in a closet, and never let him go into company. Locke.

2. To shed the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers.

I should discourse of hawks, and then treat of their [illegible], mewings, casting, and renovation of their feathers. Walton

The sun hath mew'd his beams from off his lamp,
And majesty defac'd the royal stamp Crowland.

Nine times the moon had mew'd her horns, at length

MICROCO'SM. n. f. [μικρὸς and κόσμος.] The little world.

Man is so called as being imagined, by some fanciful philosophers, to have in him somewhat analogous to the four elements.

You see this in the map of my microcosm. Shak. Coriolanus.

She to whom this world must itself refer,
As suburbs, or the microcosm of her,
She, she is dead, she's dead, when thou know'st this,
Thou know'st how lame a cripple this world is Donne

As in this our microcosm, the heart
Heat, spirit, motion gives to every part
So Rome's victorious influence on dispersed
All her own virtues through the universe. Denham

Philosophers say that man is a microcosm, or little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great; and the body natural may be compared to the body politick. Swift

MI'CROGRAPHY n. f. [μικρὸς and γράφω.] The description of the parts of such very small objects as are discernable only with a microscope.

The honey-bag is the ſtomach, which they always fill to ſatisfy and to ſpare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept againſt winter: a curious deſcription and figure of the ſting ſee in Mr. Hook's micrography. Grew's Muſæum.

MICROSCOPE. n. ſ. [μικρὸς and σκοπέω; microſcope, Fr.] [illegible] eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwiſe be ſeen.

If the eye were ſo acute as to rival the fineſt microſcopes, and to diſcern the ſmalleſt hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curſe, and not a bleſſing, to us; it would make all things appear ragged and deformed, the moſt finely poliſhed cryſtal would be uneven and rough; the ſight of our own ſelves would affright us; the ſmootheſt ſkin would be beſet all over with ragged ſcales and briſtly hairs. Bentley.

The critick eye, that microſcope of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit. Dunciad, b. .

MICRO'METER. n. ſ. [μικρὸς and μέτρον; micrometre, French.] An inſtrument contrived to meaſure ſmall ſpaces.

MI'LDEW. n. f. [mildeaw, Saxon.]

Mildew is a disease that happens in plants, and is caused by a dewy moisture which falls on them, and corrupts for want of the sun's heat, to draw it up, by its acrimony rodes, gnaws, and spoils, the inmost substance of the plant, and hinders the circulation of the nutritive sap; upon which [illegible] to fade, and the blossoms and fruit are much [illegible]or, mildew is rather a concrete substance, which exudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, which is frequently [illegible] great plenty, preying upon this exsudation. Others say, that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the spring and Summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun enough to draw it upwards to any considerable height, nor wind of force strong enough to disperse it. it condenses and falls on plants, and with its thick, clammy substance stops the pores, and by that means prevents perspiration. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants which are exposed to the East, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration, whereby the juices of the plants are concreted upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are invited thereto, where finding proper nutriment they depositе their eggs, and multiply so fast as to cover the whole surfaces of the plants, and, by corroding the vessels, prevent the motion of the sap. It is observable, that whenever a tree has been greatly affected by this mildew, it seldom recovers it in two or three years, and many times never entirely clear from it after. Hill.

Down fell the mildew of his fagged words. Fairfax.

The mildew cometh by coolness of air, and therefore in hills, or champain grounds, it seldom cometh. Bacon.

Soon blasting mildews black'ned all the grain. Dryden.

MI'LKY-WAY. n. ſ. [milky and way.] The galaxy

The milky-way, or via lactea, is a broad white path or track, encompaſſing the whole heavens, and extending itſelf in ſome places with a double path, but for the moſt part with a ſingle one. Some of the ancients, as Ariſtotle, imagined that this path conſiſted only of a certain exhalation hanging in the air, but, by the teleſcopical obſervations of this age, it hath been diſcovered to conſiſt of an innumerable quantity of fixed ſtars, different in ſituation and magnitude, from the confuſed mixture of whoſe light its whole colour is ſuppoſed to be occaſioned. It paſſes through the conſtellations of Caſſiopeia, Cygnus, Aquila, Perſeus, Andromeda, part of Ophiucus and Gemini, in the northern hemiſphere, and in the ſouthern it [illegible] part of Scorpio, Sagittarius, Centaurus, the Argo Navis and the Ara. The galaxy hath uſually been the [illegible] in which new ſtars have appeared; as that in Caſſiopeia, which was ſeen in A. D. 1572, that in the breaſt of the Swan, and another in the knee of Serpentarius; which have appeared for a while, and then become inviſible again. Hutton.

Nor need we with a pryſing eye ſurvey
The diſtant ſkies to find the milky-way:
It forcibly intrudes upon our ſight. Creech's Manilius.

How many ſtars there muſt be, a naked eye may give ſome faint glimpſe, but much more a good teleſcope, [illegible] towards that region of the ſky called the milky-way. Cheyne.

Med.*

MI'NISTRY n. f. [contracted from ministery, ministerium, Lat.]

1. Office; service.

So far is an indistinction of all persons, and, by consequence, an anarchy of all things, so far from being agreeable to the will of God, declared in his great household, the world, and especially in all the ministries of his proper household the church, that there was never yet any time, I believe, since it was a number, when some of its members were not more sacred than others. Sprat's Sermons.

Office of one set apart to preach, ecclesiastical function.

Their ministry perform'd, and race well run,
Their doctrine and their story written left,
They die. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

Saint Paul was miraculously called to the ministry of the gospel, and had the whole doctrine of the gospel from God by immediate revelation, and was appointed the apostle of the Gentiles for propagating it in the heathen world. Locke.

3. Agency; interposition.

MI'NSTREL. n. f. [menestrel, Spanish, menestrallus, low Latin.]

A musician, one who plays upon instruments.

Hark how the minstrels 'gin to shrill aloud
Their merry musick that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling croud,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser's Epithal.

I will give you the minstrel.
—Then I will give you the serving creature. Shakespeare.

I to the vulgar am become a jest,
Esteemed as a minstrel at a feast. Sandys's Paraphrase.

These fellows
Were once the minstrels of a country show;
Follow'd the prizes through each paltry town,
By trumpet-cheeks and bloated faces known. Dryden.

Often our seers and poets have confess'd,
That musick's force can tame the furious beast;
Can make the wolf, or foaming boar restrain
His rage; the lion drop his crested mane,
Attentive to the song; the lynx [illegible]
His wrath to man, and lick the minstrel's feet. Prior.

MI'NSTRELSEY. n. f. [from minstrel.]

1. Musick; instrumental harmony.

Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

2. [In theology.] An effect above human or natural power, performed in atteſtation of ſome truth.

The miracles of our Lord are peculiarly eminent above the lying wonders of demons, in that they were not made out of vain oſtentation of power, and to raiſe unprofitable amazement, but for the real benefit and advantage of men, by feeding

feeding the hungry, healing all sorts of diseases, ejecting of devils, and reviving the dead. Bentley's Sermons.

MIRA'CULOUS. adj. [miraculeux, Fr. from miracle.] Done by miracle, produced by miracle, effected by power more than natural.

Arithmetical progression might easily demonstrate how fast mankind would increase, overpassing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years from seventy unto six hundred thousand able men. Raleigh's Essays.

Restore this day, for thy great name,

Why this strength
Miraculous yet remaining in those rocks?
His might continues in thee not for naught. Milton's Ag.

At the first planting of the Christian religion in the world, God was pleased to accompany it with a miraculous power.

It was a singular providence of God, to draw those northern heathen nations down into those Christian parts, where they might receive Christianity, and to mingle nations so remote miraculously, to make one blood and kindred of all people, and each to have knowledge of him. Spenser on Ireland.

Turnus was to be slain that very day, and Æneas, wounded as he was, could not have engaged him in single combat, unless his hurt had been miraculously healed. Dryden.

1. A looking-glass, any thing which exhibits representations of objects by reflection.

And in his waters which your mirror make,
Behold your faces as the crystal bright. Spenser's E[illegible]

That pow'r which gave me eyes the world to view,
To view myself infus'd an inward light,
Whereby my soul, as by a mirror true,
Of her own form may take a perfect sight. Davies.

Less bright the moon,
But opposite in levell'd West was set
His mirror, with full face borrowing her light
From him. Milton's Par. Lost, b. VII.

Mirror of poets, mirror of our age,
Which her whole face beholding on thy stage,
Pleased and displeased with her own faults, endures
A remedy like those whom musick cures Waller.

By chance he spy'd a mirror while he spoke,
And gazing there beheld his alter'd look,
Wond'ring, he saw his features and his hue,
So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew.
Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Late as I rang'd the crystal wilds of air,
In the clear mirror of thy ruling star,
I saw, alas! some dread event impend. Pope.

2. It is used for pattern; for that on which the eye ought to be fixed, an exemplar; an archetype.

The works of nature are no less exact, than if she did both behold and study how to express some absolute shape or mirror always present before her. Hooker, b. i.

O goddess, heavenly bright,
Mirrour of grace and majesty divine. Fairy Queen, b.

How farr'st thou, mirror of all martial men? Spens.

What to the dauphin from England?
—Scorn and defiance, slight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not misbecome
The mighty sender. Shak. Henry V.

That boldness which lads get amongst their play-fellows, has such a mixture of rudeness and an ill-turn'd confidence, that those misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned to make way for better principles. Locke.

Portius, thou may'st rely upon my conduct;
Thy father will not act what misbecomes him. Addison.

MISBEGO'T. } adj. [begot or begotten with mis.] Unlawfully
MISBEGO'TTEN } or irregularly begotten.

Contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood, I spill of thine. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Your words have taken such pains, as if they labour'd
To bring man-slaughter into form, set quarrelling
Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,
Is valour misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were but newly born. Shakesp.

The misbegotten infant grows,
And, ripe for birth, distends with deadly throes
The swelling rind, with unavailing strife,
To leave the wooden womb, and pushes into life. Dryden.

What you miscall their folly is their care. Dryden.

MISCA'RRIAGE. n. f. [mis and carriage.]

1. Unhappy event of our undertaking, failure, ill conduct.

Resolutions of future reforming do not always satisfy justice, nor prevent vengeance for former miscarriages King Charles

When a counsellor, to save himself,
Would lay miscarriages upon his prince,
Exposing him to publick rage and hate,
O, 'tis an act as infamously base,
As, should a common soldier skulk behind,
And throw his guilt on the front of war. Dryd. Sp. Fr.

If the neglect or abuse of the liberty he had, to examine what would really make for his happiness, misleads him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

A great part of that time which the inhabitants of the former earth had to spare, and whereof they made so ill use, was now employed in digging and plowing, and the excess of fertility which contributed so much to their miscarriages, was retrenched and cut off. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. 1.

Your cures annul your toil,
But wisely your miscarriages conceal. Garth's Dispensatory.

How, alas! will he appear in that awful day, when even the failings and miscarriages of the righteous shall not be concealed, though the mercy of God be magnified in their pardon. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Abortion; act of bringing forth before the time.

There must be dying and death, as well as miscarriages and abortions; for there died many women with child. Graunt's Bills of Mortality

For a time caught up to God, as once
Moses was in the mount, and missing long,
And the great Thisbite, who on fiery wheels
Rode up to heaven, yet once again to come. Milt. Par. R

5. To mistake; to fail.

Th' inventor all admir'd, and each, how he
To be th' inventor miss'd, so easy it seem'd,
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought
Impossible. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v

6. To fail to obtain, learn, or find; sometimes with of before the object.

Grittus missing of the Moldavian fell upon Maylat. Knolles.

The moral and relative perfections of the Deity are easy to be understood by us; upon the least reflection we cannot miss of them. Atterbury's Sermons.

Miss. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Loss, want.

In humble dales is footing fast,
The trode is not so tickle,
And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his misse not mickle. Spenser's Pastorals.

I could have better spar'd a better man.
Oh, I should have a heavy miss of thee,
If I were much in love with vanity. Shakesp. Henry IV.

If these papers have that evidence in them, there will be no great miss of those which are lost, and my reader may be satisfied without them. Locke.

We ought not to believe that the banks of the ocean are really deformed, because they have not the form of a regular bulwark, nor that the mountains are misshapen, because they are not exact pyramids or cones. Bentley's Sermons.

Some figures monstrous and misshap'd appear
Consider'd singly, or beheld too near,
Which but proportion'd to their site or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace. Pope.

2. In Shakespeare, perhaps, it once signifies ill directed: as, to shape a course.

Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Misshapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skill-less soldiers flask,
I set on fire. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Mi'ssile adj. [missilis, Lat.] Thrown by the hand; striking at distance.

We bend the bow, or wing the missile dart. Pope.

Mi'ssion. n. f. [missio, Latin.]

1. Commission; the state of being sent by supreme authority

Her son tracing the desart wild,
All his great work to come before him set,
How to begin, how to accomplish best,
His end of being on earth, and mission high. Milt. Pa. Reg.

The divine authority of our mission, and the powers vested in us by the high-priest of our profession, Christ Jesus, are publickly disputed and denied. Atterbury.

2. Persons sent on any account, usually to propagate religion.

In these ships there should be a mission of three of the brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the sciences, manufactures, and inventions of all the world, and bring us books and patterns; and that the brethren should stay abroad till the new mission. Bacon's New Atlantis.

3. Dismission, discharge. Not in use

In Cesar's army, somewhat the soldiers would have had, yet only demanded a mission or discharge, though with no intention it should be granted, but thought to wrench him to their other desires; whereupon with one cry they asked mission. Bacon's Apophth.

4. Faction; party. Not in use.

Glorious deeds, in these first ds of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drove great Mars to faction. Shakespeare.

Great aids came in to him; partly upon missives, and partly voluntaries from many parts. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. A messenger.

Knowing in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters; and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience. Shakespeare.

While wrapt in the wonder of it came missives from the king, who all hail'd me thane of Cawdor. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Misspe'ak. v. a. [mis and speak.] To speak wrong

It is not so; thou hast misspoke, misheard,
Ted o'er thy tale again. Shakesp. King Lear.

A mother delights to hear
Her early child misspeak half-utter'd words. Dryden

Mist. n. f. [myrt, Saxon.]

1. A low thin cloud; a small thin rain not perceived in single drops.

Old Chaucer, like the morning star,
To us discovers day from far,
His sight those mists and clouds dissolv'd
Which our dark nation long involv'd. Denham.

And mists condens'd to clouds obscure the sky,
And clouds dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply Roscommon.

As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops, either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew.

But hov'ring mists around his brows are spread,
And night with sable shades involves his head. Dryden

A cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke

2. Any thing that dims or darkens.

My peoples eyes were once blinded with such mists of suspicion, they are soon misled into the most desperate actions King Charles.

Passion cast a mist before his sense,
And either made or magnify'd th' offence. Dryden

To Mist. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloud; to cover with a vapour or steam.

Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she lives. Shakesp. King Lear

Mista'kable. adj. [from mistake.] Liable to be conceived wrong.

It is not strange to see the difference of a third part in so large an account, if we consider how differently they are set forth in minor and less mistakable numbers. Brown.

To

To MISTA'KE. v. a. [mis and take.] To conceive wrong, to take something for that which it is not.

The towns, neither of the one side nor the other, willing y [illegible] for fear of being mistaken. Sidney.

These do truly apprehend a great affinity between their practice of invocation of saints and the heathen idolatry, or else there was no danger one should be mistaken for the other. Stil.

This if neglected will make the reader very much [illegible] and misunderstand his meaning, and render the sense very perplexed. Locke.

Fancy passes for knowlege, and what is pretty fair is mistaken for solid. Locke.

Fools into the notion fall,
That vice or virtue there is none at all.
Ask your own heart, and nothing is so plain.
'Tis to mistake them costs the time and pain. Pope.

To MISTA'KE. v. n. To err, not to judge right.

Seeing God found folly in his angels, mens judgments, which inhabit these houses of clay, cannot be without their mistakings. Raleigh's Hist of the World.

Seldom any one mistakes in his names of simple ideas, or applies the name red to the idea green. Locke.

Servants mistake, and sometimes occasion misunderstanding, among friends. Swift.

MISTA'EN pret. and part. pass of mistake for mistaken, and so retained in Scotland.

This dagger hath mista'en; for lo! the sheath
Lies empty on the back of Montague,
The point mishcathed in my daughter's bosom. Shakesp.

To be MISTA'KEN. To err.

England is so idly king'd
— You are too much mistaken in this king.
Question, your grace, the late embassadors,
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution. Shakesp. Henry V.

Mistaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,
But cut the bond of union with that stroke. Waller.

MISTA'KE. n. s. [from the verb.] Misconception; error.

He never shall find out fit mate, but such
As some misfortune brings him, or mistake. Milton.

Infallibility is an absolute security of the understanding from all possibility of mistake in what it believes. Tillotson.

Those terrors are not to be charged upon religion, which proceed either from the want of religion, or superstitious mistakes about it. Bentley's Sermons.

MISTA'KINGLY. adv. [from mistaking.] Erroneously, fallsly.

The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall which does indeed belong to the object. Boyle on Colours.

To MISTE'MPER. v. a. [mis and temper.] To temper ill, to disorder.

This mundation of mistemper'd humour
Rests by you only to be qualified. Shakesp. King John.

MI'STER. adj. [from metier, trade, French.] What mister, what kind of.

The redcrosse knight toward him crossed fast,
To weet what mister wight was so dismay'd,
There him he finds all senseless and aghast. Spenser.

To MISTE'RM. v. a. [mis and term.] To term erroneously.

Hence banished, is banish'd from the world;
And world exil'd as death. That banished
Is death misterm'd. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

To MISTHI'NK. v. a. [mis and think.] To think ill.

How will the country, for these woful chances,
Misthink the king, and not be satisfy'd. Shakespeare.

We, the greatest, are misthought
For things that others do. Shakesp. Ant and Cleopatra.

Thoughts! which how found they harbour in thy breast,
Adam! Misthought of her to thee so dear? Milton.

MI'STINESS. n. s. [from misty.] Cloudiness; state of being overcast.

The speedy depredation of air upon watry moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in the sudden vanishing of vapours from glass, or the blade of a sword, such as doth not at all detain or imbibe the moisture, for the mistiness scattereth immediately. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N°. 91.

MISTION. n. s. [from mistus, Latin.] The state of being mingled.

In animals many actions are mixt, and depend upon their living form as well as that of mistion, and though they wholly seem to retain unto the body, depart upon dissolution. Browne.

Both bodies do, by the new texture resulting from their mistion, produce colour. Boyle on Colours.

MISTLETOE. n. s. [mystelkan, Saxon; mistel, Danish, birdlime, and tan, a twig.] A plant.

The flower of the mistletoe consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a bason, divided into four parts, and beset with warts; the ovary which is produced in the female flowers is placed in a remote part of the plant from the male flowers, and consists of four shorter leaves; this becomes a round berry full of a glutinous substance, inclosing a plain heart-shaped seed: this plant is always produced from seed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, as most other plants, but will always grow upon trees; from whence the ancients accounted it a super-plant, who thought it to be an excrescence on the tree without the seed being previously lodged there, which opinion is now generally confuted. The manner of its propagation is as follows, viz. the mistletoe thrush, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is ripe, doth open the seed from tree to tree; for the viscous part of the berry, which immediately surrounds the seed, doth sometimes fasten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get disengaged of, he strikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and so leaves the seed sticking by this viscous matter to the bark, which, if it lights upon a smooth part of the tree, will fasten itself, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth most readily take upon are the apple, the ash, and some other smooth rind trees: it is observable, that whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of these plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preserved by the curious in their collections of natural curosities. Mill.

If snowe do continue, sheepe hardly that fare
Crave mistle and ivie for them for to spare. Tusser's Husb.

A barren and detested vale, you see it is:
The trees, though Summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistletoe. Shakespeare.

Mistletoe groweth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, sometimes upon hazles, and rarely upon oaks; the mistletoe whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green Winter and Summer, and beareth a white gathering berry; and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth. Bacon.

All your temples strow
With laurel green, and sacred mistletoe. Gay's Trivia.

MI'STLIKE. adj. [mist and like.] Resembling a mist.

Good Romeo, hide thyself.
— Not I, unless the breath of heart sick groans,
Mistlike infold me from the search of eyes. Shakespeare.

MO'RTAR, n. ſ. [murter, Dutch; mortier, French.] Cement made of lime and ſand with water, and uſed to join ſtones or bricks.
Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and ſand mixed up with water, ſerving as a cement, and uſed by maſons and bricklayers in building of walls of ſtone and brick. Vitruvius obſerves, that the ſand ſhould be dry and ſharp, ſo as to prick the hands when rubbed, yet not earthy, ſo as to foul the water it is waſhed in. He alſo finds fault with maſons and bricklayers as committing a great error, in letting their lime ſlacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and alſo in letting their mortar cool and die before they uſe it; therefore he adviſes, that if you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little at a time, that the mortar may not lie long before it be uſed.
I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakeſp. King Lear.
They had brick for ſtone, and ſlime for mortar. Gen. xi. 3.

Mu'MMY. n. ſ. [mumie, Fr. mumia, Lat. derived by Salmaſius from amomum, by Bochart from the Arabick.]

1. A dead body preſerved by the Egyptian art of embalming.

We have two different ſubſtances preſerved for medicinal uſe under the name of mummy: one is the dried fleſh of human bodies embalmed with myrrh and ſpice; the other is the liquor running from ſuch mummies when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damps: this is ſometimes of a liquid, ſometimes of a ſolid form, as it is preſerved in vials well ſtopped, or ſuffered to dry and harden in the air: the firſt kind is brought to us in large pieces, of a lax and friable texture, light and ſpongy, of a blackiſh brown colour, and often black and clammy on the ſurface; it is of a ſtrong but not agreeable ſmell: the ſecond ſort, in its conſiſtence, is a thick, opake, [illegible] coarſe fluid, of a blackiſh [illegible] but not diſagreeable ſmell: in its indurated ſolid ſubſtance, of a fine ſhining black colour and cloſe texture, eaſily broken, and of a good ſmell: this ſort is extremely dear, and the firſt ſort ſo cheap, that as all kinds of mummy are brought from Egypt we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggiſts are ſupplied with is the fleſh of executed criminals, or of any other bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen ſo plentiful in that part of the world, and adding aloes, and ſome other cheap ingredients, ſend them to be baked in an oven till the juices are exhaled, and the embalming matter has penetrated ſo thoroughly that the fleſh will keep. Mummy has been eſteemed reſolvent and balſamick; and beſides it, the ſkull, and even the moſs growing on the ſkulls of human ſkeletons, have been celebrated for ant epileptick virtues; the fat alſo of the human body has been recommended in rheumatiſms, and every other part or humour have been in repute for the cure of ſome diſeaſes: at preſent we are wiſe enough to know, that the virtues aſcribed to the parts of the human body are all either imaginary, or ſuch as may be found in other animal ſubſtances: the mummy and the ſkull alone of all theſe horrid medicines retain their places in the ſhops. — Hill's Mat. Med.

The ſilk
Was dy'd in mummy, which the ſkilful
Conſerv'd of maidens hearts. — Shakeſp. Othello.

A large cavity in the incipit was filled with ribbons, lace, embroidery, wrought together in a curious piece of network.

NEVER adv. [ne ever, næfre, Saxon; ne æfre, not ever.]

1. At no time.

2. It is uſed in a form of ſpeech handed down by the beſt writers, but barely accuſed, I think, with juſtice, of ſolecism, as, he is miſtaken though never ſo wiſe. It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expreſſed thus, he is miſtaken though ever ſo wiſe, that is, he is miſtaken how wiſe ſoever he may be. The common mode can only be defended by ſuppoſing a very harſh and unprecedented ellipſis, he is miſtaken though ſo wiſe, as never has any. Such however is the grammar and uſe of the word among the beſt authors.

By its own force deſtroy'd, fruition ceas'd,
And always weary'd, I was never pleas'd. Prior.

Never any thing was ſo unbred as that odious man. Congreve's Way of the World.

Be it never ſo true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a ſmall thing perſuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

Aſk me never ſo much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye ſhall ſay Gen. xxxiv. 12.

In a living creature, though never ſo great, the ſenſe and the affects of any one part of the body, inſtantly make a tranſcurſion throughout the whole body. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

They deſtroyed all, were it never ſo pleaſant, within a mile of the town. Knolles's Hiſt. of the Turks.

He that ſhuts his eyes againſt a ſmall light, would not be brought to ſee that which he had no mind to ſee, let it be placed in never ſo clear a light, and never ſo near him. Atterbury's Sermons.

That prince whom you eſpouſe, although never ſo vigorouſly, is the principal in war, you but a ſecond. Swift.

3. In no degree.

Whoſoever has a faithful friend to guide him, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet ſee never the worſe. South's Sermons.

4. It ſeems in ſome phraſes to have the ſenſe of an adjective. Not any.

He anſwered him to never a word, inſomuch that the governour marvelled. Matt. xxvii. 14.

5. It is much uſed in compoſition; as, never-ending, having no end, of which ſome examples are ſubjoined.

Nature aſſureth us by never-failing experience, and reaſon by infallible demonſtration, that our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh.

[illegible]
I come to pluck your berries harſh and crude. Milton.

Your never fading ſword made war to ceaſe,
And now you heal us with the acts of peace. Waller.

So corn in fields, and in the garden flow'rs,
Revive and raiſe themſelves with moderate ſhow'rs;
But over-charg'd with never-ceaſing rain,
Become too moiſt Waller.

Our heroes of the former days,
Deſerv'd and gain'd their never-fading bays. Roſcommon.

Not Thracian Orpheus ſhould tranſcend my lays,
Nor Linus crown'd with never-fading bays. Dryden.

Leucippus, with his never-erring dart Dryd. Ovid.

Farewel, ye never-opening gates. Dryden.

He to quench his drought to much inclin'd,
May ſnowy hills and nitrous paſtures find;
Meet ſtores of cold ſo greedily purſued,
And be refreſh'd with never-waſting food. Blackmore.

Norton hung down his never bluſhing head,
And all was huſh'd, as folly's ſelf lay dead. Pope's Dunc.

What the weak head with ſtrongeſt bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

Thy buſy never-meaning face,
Thy ſcrew'd up front, thy ſtate grimace. Swift.

NEVERTHELESS. adv. [never the leſs] Notwithſtanding that.

They plead that even ſuch ceremonies of the church of Rome as contain in them nothing which is not of itſelf agreeable to the word of God, ought nevertheleſs to be aboliſhed. Hooker, b. iv.

Many of our men were gone to land, and our ſhips ready to depart; nevertheleſs the admiral, with ſuch ſhips only as could ſuddenly be put in readineſs, made forth towards them. Bacon.

Creation muſt needs infer providence; and God's making the world, irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of a dependent nature remains nevertheleſs independent upon him in that reſpect. South's Sermons.

Men who poſſeſs a ſtate of neutrality in times of public danger, deſert the common intereſt of their fellow-ſubjects. Addiſon.

The king, late griefs revolving in his mind,
Theſe reaſons for neutrality aſſign'd. Garth's Ovid.

All pretences to neutrality are juſtly exploded, only intending the ſafety and eaſe of a few individuals, while the publick is embroiled. This was the opinion and practice of the latter Cato. Swift

2. A ſtate between good and evil.

There is no health phyſicians ſay, that we
At beſt enjoy but a neutrality. Donne.

NEU'TRALLY. adv. [from neutral] Indifferently; on neither ſide.

NEW. adj [newyd, Welſh; neop, Saxon, neuf, Fr.]

1. Not old; freſh, lately produced, made or had, novel. It is uſed of things: as, young of perſons.

What's the neweſt grief? ———
——That of an hour's age doth hiſs the ſpeaker;
Each minute teems a new one. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

Do not all men complain how little we know, and how much is ſtill unknown? And can we ever know more, unleſs ſomething new be diſcovered? Burnet.

2. Modern, of the preſent time.

Whoever converſes much among old books, will be ſomething hard to pleaſe among new. Temple's Miſcellanies.

3. Not antiquated; having the effect of novelty
